We've all been raised to believe we'd be millionaires, movie gods & rock stars

Channel: Onem · Published: Aug 12, 2026 · Watch: https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=nTBbD2j6zxU Source: full transcript

📋 Executive Summary

The average age of entrepreneurial success is 45–47, not 21. Using Mourinho, hospitality founders, and a graveyard of jailed gurus as evidence, Chris argues that sustainable wealth takes decades of compounding skill and patience — not courses or get-rich-quick schemes.

📑 Contents

🎭 The Myth You Were Sold 0:00

- The core message being sold online: success is fast, easy, and achievable in 6–12 months if you "lock in"
  - This framing exists to get you to buy a course — the urgency and simplicity are sales tactics, not truth
- The stat most people hear but dismiss: the average age of entrepreneurial success (founding a business) is 45–47
  - People hear it, search one or two names, and move on without internalising it
- The Fight Club quote frames the whole video: > "We've all been raised on television to believe that one day we'd all be millionaires and movie gods and rock stars, but we won't. We're slowly learning that fact."
- A generation of young men has been told by "rich kids with PDFs" that they can be multi-millionaires by 23
  - Many of these gurus grew up in places like Chelsea, attended the most expensive private schools in the UK, and inherited or were given millions
  - One unnamed example: admitted on a podcast he didn't actually achieve what he claims, then asked for the podcast to be taken down — financial records confirm this

    - The "23-year-old millionaire" is often literally the son of a multi-millionaire who died and passed down wealth
- The real-world consequence of following this advice:
    - You end up 29, broke, with a 10-year CV gap that reads "trying to become top G / alpha male / sigma male lone wolf"
    - That CV gap won't get you hired anywhere

⚽ The Mourinho Blueprint: What Late Success Actually Looks Like 0:191

- Chris watched the new Mourinho documentary while taking a rare night off and was struck by the timeline of his career
- Mourinho's early career:
    - Spent roughly the first 10 years as an assistant coach and translator
    - Was driving alone around Spain for hours at a time, working late into the night (3am), on a poor wage with no clear trajectory
- Age 38 — finally gets the Porto job (Porto being arguably Portugal's second-biggest club)
    - Salary: approximately €650,000/year — good money, but after taxes and living costs, his net worth at that point was roughly €500,000
    - "Pretty modest, pretty normal amount of money"
- Age 41 — three years into Porto, wins the Champions League against all odds with a team that shouldn't have won it
    - This is the inflection point: his net worth was probably around €1 million at the end of those three years
- Immediately after, joins Chelsea at £6 million/year plus bonuses
    - Picks up advertising deals (Nescafé, banking companies, etc.)
    - Net worth reaches an estimated €10 million by age 42 after winning the league in his first season
- The arc: €500k at 38 → €10 million at 42 — four years, once the foundation was built
- Chris's reflection: "I'm 33. A lot of you call me Unk, you think I'm old as f. And then I realise I'm like, wow, I'm so far ahead."
- Key lesson: Mourinho spent a decade grinding under Bobby Robson, learning from players like Ronaldo (the original), Pep Guardiola, Figo — absorbing experience before executing independently

📈 Aggregation of Marginal Age: How Skills Compound Over Time 0:488

- The concept originates from Team Sky's cycling strategy: "aggregation of marginal gains"
    - Instead of asking how to be faster, they asked: can we sleep 1% better? Is the saddle 1% more comfortable? Can the aerodynamics, bike weight, rider weight, and power output each improve by 1%?
    - Added together, those 1% gains compound to something like a 65% total improvement
- Chris applies this to human development: "aggregation of marginal age"

    - Every year you stop making the same mistakes
    - You learn from previous errors
    - You accumulate real-world skills
    - You grow as a decision-maker, money manager, relationship builder
- Personal example: ONM as a members club is approximately 2 years old
    - In that time Chris describes himself as "a different human being" — travelled extensively, lived in London, secured Barcelona VIP seats, learned Spanish, went from single to nearly a year into a relationship
    - "The things I know, the things I've done now... I am more accomplished as a man by probably 50x than I was 2 years ago"
- This compounding is what makes your 30s and 40s so powerful — the mistakes of your teens and 20s become the foundation, not a waste

🏨 Hospitality Giants: Every Major Hotel Brand Was Founded Late 0:1256

- Chris compares his own timeline (first property purchase at age 31) to the founders of the biggest hospitality brands in the world:

Brand / Founder	Age at First Major Move
César Ritz (Ritz Carlton)	48
Ritz co-founder	44
Conrad Hilton	31
Aman Resorts (current owner)	31 (first investment)
Aman Resorts (original founder)	~49–54
Soho House founder	31
Sheraton co-founder	41
Sheraton founder	40
Vinci Hotels founder	Early 60s
Marriott founder	56
Hyatt founder	34
Holiday Inn founder	39
Accor founders	33 and 35

- The average age across that list is roughly 44–45 — which directly mirrors the 45–47 entrepreneurial success statistic
- The Aman original founder ("Zea or something") is still alive today and started another hotel at age 94

- Chris's point: "You don't really have a say in it" — you cannot simply decide to compress this timeline through willpower or hustle alone

🚗 Supercars, Vanity Metrics, and the Illusion of Wealth 0:721

- Supercars are far cheaper to fake than people realise:
  - A McLaren 720S lease: approximately £3,000/month
  - That same £3,000/month is what Chris is spending on pool heater installation, sun loungers, hot tub and sauna work (~€10,000 total for 3 months)
  - A London venue Chris is eyeing costs £25,000/month (closer to £22–23k with business rates and staff, ~£25k once restocking is included) — equivalent to leasing a Bugatti
- "For 3 months I could have driven around in a McLaren 720S all black Batman style and you guys would have gone, 'Oh my god, Chris'... Do you know how cheap it is to do these things?"
- The real cost comparison in Chris's own life:
  - His camera operator costs approximately £34,000/month
  - He spends more on flights than many young guys spend on Lamborghinis
  - His house is worth approximately six times more than a supercar
- Dubai content creators example (told by a former editor):
  - Editor had 4 Dubai clients with 600–800k followers each
  - None of them paid him on time — they needed to use his footage to sell a course first, then pay him 2–3 months later, because the car lease payments were going out immediately
  - Chris paid the same editor immediately upon completion of work
- The psychological trap: "Someone making £20k/month spending £19,700 to keep up appearances so they can make another £20k"
  - Or spending £49k of £50k revenue on ads — the surface looks like success, the reality is zero net wealth
- Practical downsides of actually owning a supercar:
  - Security risk — number plate tracking, house robbery, kidnapping concern
  - Can't park without fear of damage (keying, scratching)
  - Only two seats — can't pick your mum up from the airport
  - Loud at 5am, impractical daily
  - In Dubai, everyone has one, so it becomes meaningless anyway

👮 The Guru Graveyard: Prison, Ponzis, and Rich Kids with PDFs 0:1973

- Chris's claim: "90% of them are in prison, being investigated, or on an FCA warning list"
- Named examples and their outcomes:
  - Luke Belmar — grandfather worth £100 million; Belmar on FCA warning list for crypto; grandfather allegedly linked to money stolen from a charity (Chris references "Colonial Dignidad" but stops short of elaborating)

    - Andrew Tate — currently facing charges for trafficking and child abuse, which Chris says "seems concrete now"; Chris claims he warned the community years ago
    - Iman Gadzhi — grew up wealthy, attended the most expensive school in the UK, lived in Chelsea; the implication is his success story is not replicable from nothing
    - The Anoa'i brothers — went to prison for drugs
    - Watson — currently in prison for drugs
    - Grant Cardone — currently being investigated for running a Ponzi scheme; described mechanism: takes investor money → company valuation rises → takes new investor money to pay off old investor → borrows against inflated valuation from banks
    - Tai Lopez — proven to have run a Ponzi scheme; has to repay money slowly
    - An unnamed individual who claimed to be a billionaire, faked a hedge fund, and is now in prison
- Chris's logic: "They all end up in prison 5 years later" — following their strategy either means you'll be incarcerated or you'll discover the whole thing was built on inherited wealth that isn't replicable
- Why genuine gurus don't give away real secrets:
    - "If you ask me, Chris, how do I build a members club — I'm going to give you all the wrong answers. Why would I go through all that for years and then help you?"
    - Even in a hypothetical world where someone genuinely wanted to teach: 20,000–30,000 people buy the same course and compete for the same limited pool of clients with limited marketing budgets — only the top 10 make real money

🏗️ Real Business Is Slow, Non-Linear, and Uncontrollable [0:1494]

- The false mental model most people use: business is linear
    - "Year 1: £50k, Year 2: £500k, Year 3: £5 million" — this is not how it works
- Real disruptions that destroy linear thinking:
    - COVID wiped out hotel businesses and airlines mid-growth; companies that had invested £50 million into new airlines had to take on massive debt overnight
    - "You don't know what's going to pop up — which is why it takes most people until their 40s to gain any traction"
- The "100k month" lie — how online income claims are manufactured:
    - Someone does ~£70k in one month
    - Rounds up and overclaims to "roughly £100k", converts to dollars, inflates further
    - Real figure: more like £60k actual pounds, once
    - The next month: £20k. The month after: £5k. Total for the year: ~£110k — comparable to a doctor's salary after 20 years of experience
    - Crucially, theirs isn't repeatable; a doctor's is
- The richest people Chris personally knows:
    - Had 9-to-5 jobs paying £100k–£300k/year for 20–30 years
    - Made smart investments along the way

    - Built wealth on a stable, repeatable foundation — not a single big month

- Chris's own current dilemma as a real-world example:
    - Wants to open a London venue at £25,000/month
    - Has been advised against it by multiple people: "Your audience doesn't have £4–5k/year for a members club"
    - The average UK person has less than £1,000 in savings (data purchased by a contact named Justin Jenk when Chris worked in finance; less than 70% of UK adults have £1,000 saved)
    - Even in Switzerland — where workers earn 13 salaries/year plus Christmas bonuses and can earn £4–5k/month in a bar — average monthly savings are only £1,400
    - Risk: if he opens the London venue and no one joins, paying £25k/month for 2–3 years could wipe him out entirely
    - Conclusion: "I might have to wait until I'm 35 to execute on that plan" — not because of laziness, but because the audience and market aren't ready

🔁 Netflix, Sam Walton, and the Patience of Building a Lasting Brand [0:1859]

- Netflix as the template for "the world wasn't ready yet":
    - Netflix always wanted to stream; the world didn't understand streaming
    - So they pivoted to posting DVDs — doing what people already understood (like Blockbuster but delivered to your door)
    - About 10 years later, they launched streaming; the world called it revolutionary
    - It wasn't new — Reed Hastings (Chris references Mark Cuban streaming the Victoria's Secret fashion show in the late '90s and selling his company for billions as the inspiration) had the idea a decade prior
    - "Netflix was Netflix 10 years earlier. You just didn't hear about it until the audience was ready."
    - By the time the world caught up, the founders were in their 50s and 60s, building generational wealth

- Sam Walton (Walmart):
    - Flew over America in a plane marking locations on a map for the next stores
    - Used a tape measure in competitors' aisles to measure spacing and understand why customers were more satisfied
    - Arranged products near kiosks to maximise exit sales
    - "Study that stuff. Study real business."

- Ray Kroc (McDonald's):
    - Was likely in his 50s before he got control of McDonald's and started making serious money

- Dana White (UFC):
    - Was 41 and broke, in serious debt, when the UFC took off
    - Had two billionaire school friends — the Fertitta brothers — who invested in the company
    - "Had he not gone to school with them, we wouldn't know Dana White today" — acknowledging the huge element of luck in every success story

- Mark Cuban on whether he could become a billionaire again:
  - "Through hard work, you can become a millionaire, but it takes a long time. To become a billionaire, you have to get lucky."

✅ The Takeaway: Patience vs. Laziness, and What to Do Instead [0:2733]

- Critical distinction Chris wants to clarify:
  - Patience = continuing to work hard every day while accepting you can't control the timeline
  - Laziness = sitting on your hands and using "the average age is 45" as an excuse to do nothing
  - "Today's Chris is pushing harder than ever. I'm tired. I work my balls off every day."
- What not to do with early success:
  - If you make £100k in a year, do not buy a car
  - The goal is decades of compounding, not one good month
- The "here's what I learned from losing all my money" video cycle:
  - Chris sees creators (e.g., someone named Jordan Welch) who have made three of these videos — losing, rebuilding, losing again
  - This is the inevitable outcome of chasing quick money without a sustainable model
- Quick-money traps to avoid:
  - NFTs, memecoins, course-selling pyramids, copying other people's content strategies
  - "The richest guys I know who made money quick online that are young get dunked on by women, lose money through marriage, have supercars losing value daily, and their business models have collapsed"
  - Vanity metrics (views, follower counts) attract broke audiences who never take action — they just watch content all day
- What to build instead:
  - Something still operating in 10–20 years
  - Study old-school operators: Sam Walton, Ray Kroc, Conrad Hilton
  - Learn from people who built pre-internet — "they know a little bit more"
  - Respect your elders: "When my dad said take a coat, you'll be cold — I ended up needing a coat."
- ONM's own roadmap (as a live case study in patience):
  - Continue building the resort property (pool heater, sauna, hot tub, pool table)
  - 10–12 trips per year, Barcelona VIP seats, world-class accommodation
  - Let the product speak: "You'll see it. You'll see the system."
  - Timeline: another 2–3 years to convince people, then 5 more years for members to build enough income to sustain the model — "that's a sustainable business model"
- Free community plug (ONM Education):
  - A 42-day challenge with approximately 50 hours of free content
  - Covers finance management, best cities to live in, mindset, future of the world

  - Pathway: Free education → ONM Work (paid) → Lifestyle/dream life
  - "There's no commitment. See what you think. Community's great."
- Final message: > "Life is long. Don't try and make money for the next 2–3 years. Try and build something sustainable that's still going to be here in 10, 20 years. Otherwise, you're going to be the guy that popped off, made all this money, has nothing left, and is making the 'here's what I learned from losing all my money' video."