My Type of Fun (Most People Call It Discipline)

Channel: Brandon Carter · Published: Nov 03, 2026 · Watch: https://www.youtube.com/shorts/NvOa715nNCM Source: description only

📋 Executive Summary

Brandon Carter contrasts conventional "fun" with his active morning routine, arguing that once hard things become enjoyable habits, discipline disappears and consistency becomes effortless.

📑 Contents

- 🎉 The Problem With Most People's Fun
- 🌅 What Brandon's Version of Fun Looks Like
- 💡 The Core Mindset Shift

🎉 The Problem With Most People's Fun

- Most people's idea of fun is a weekend that "wipes out their whole week"
  - Implies recovery costs — lost energy, lost momentum, lost progress
  - The enjoyment is short-term but the damage lingers into the working week

🌅 What Brandon's Version of Fun Looks Like

- A morning routine built around movement and recovery, done outdoors and in the gym
  - Walking the bay at sunrise
  - Handstands on the sand
  - Lat pulldowns, push-ups, and cable work
  - A few minutes in a cryo chamber
- Each element is physically demanding but framed as the highlight of the day, not a chore

💡 The Core Mindset Shift

> "Find the kind of hard you actually enjoy and you'll never have to force yourself again." - Discipline stopped feeling like discipline after consistent repetition — it became "the best part of my day" - The key is not willpower but alignment — choosing hard activities that genuinely appeal to you - Once that match is found, motivation is no longer required; the activity sustains itself