🚀 Breaking Records and the Costco Opportunity 0:00

- The team was setting record numbers across every market where they launched their products
  - This period is described as "the true first launch" of their professional journey
- They pitched their product to Costco, entering a slow and highly detailed quality assurance process

⏳ The Year-Long Quality Assurance Delay 0:00

- The greens powder contained a large number of ingredients, which created a bottleneck in Costco's QA process
  - Costco could not process each ingredient in parallel; they had to verify one ingredient, then move sequentially to the next
- The result was a full year of waiting before Costco gave the green light for Bloom Greens to launch in their stores

📉 Missing the Market Window 0:23

- By the time approval finally came, the greens supplement trend had already begun to fade
  - The momentum that had been building around greens products was no longer as strong as it once was
- This put the company in a difficult position, forcing the team to become highly creative about Bloom's future direction

💡 Adversity as the Origin of Bloom Energy 0:47

- What Greg describes as one of the most stressful moments in their journey — missing the ideal Costco launch window and losing the "moon landing" opportunity — ultimately became a turning point
- That forced creativity and reinvention led directly to the creation of Bloom Energy, which is what the brand has become today

> "What was at that time one of the most stressful moments in our journey… turned into the starting point and the reason we created Bloom Energy."
