Your "Healthy" Smoothie Is A Bag Of Groceries

Channel: Brandon Carter · Published: Oct 26, 2026 · Watch: https://www.youtube.com/shorts/1XK5orYp7N4 Source: full transcript

📋 Executive Summary

Smoothies stuffed with peanut butter, banana, protein powder, and milk pack a massive calorie load without making you full. The rule: avoid all liquid calories except a plain protein shake.

📑 Contents

- 🥤 The "Healthy" Smoothie Trap
- 🚫 The Liquid Calorie Rule

🥤 The "Healthy" Smoothie Trap 0:00

- Many people build smoothies believing they are making a healthy choice
  - Common ingredients called out: peanut butter, banana, whey protein, and milk
  - Each of those ingredients carries significant calories on its own; combined, the total is very high
- The core problem is that liquid calories don't trigger fullness
  - You can drink a large, calorie-dense smoothie and still feel hungry immediately after
  - This makes it extremely easy to overconsume calories without noticing

🚫 The Liquid Calorie Rule 0:27

- The recommendation is zero liquid calories — with one narrow exception
  - The only acceptable liquid calorie source is a protein shake
  - Even then, keep it strictly protein — do not add extra ingredients that turn it into a meal

> "Don't turn your protein shake into groceries."

- Practical takeaway: if you want a protein shake, mix protein powder with water (or a minimal base) and nothing else