If you're too cool to look like you're trying, you're not serious about winning.

Channel: Greg Lav · Published: Nov 10, 2026 · Watch: https://www.youtube.com/shorts/JXLwJwSUmSs Source: full transcript

📋 Executive Summary

Greg Lav calls out a major red flag in up-and-coming entrepreneurs: being too cool to visibly promote their own venture. Real winners exhaust every possible resource — embarrassment is not an option.

📑 Contents

- 🚩 The "Too Cool" Red Flag
- 💪 Greg's Own Humble Beginnings
- 📣 The Mindset Shift: Yell From the Rooftops

🚩 The "Too Cool" Red Flag 0:00

- The biggest red flag Greg sees in up-and-coming entrepreneurs is that they are "too cool"
  - Too cool to look like they're trying
  - Too cool to post on their Instagram story
  - Too cool to put their venture in their Instagram bio
  - Too cool to post about it across all their social media channels
- This reluctance equals failure to "deploy every possible resource" to make the venture succeed

💪 Greg's Own Humble Beginnings 0:24

- Greg received pushback in comments suggesting it's easy for him to promote his brand (Bloom) now
  - Commenters implied it's only "cool" to talk about Bloom because he's successful
- He fires back: he is 10 years in — it wasn't always cool or easy
  - He sold weight loss PDFs after failing out of college — not a glamorous starting point
  - He and his wife lived in his father-in-law's house while building the business
  - They were hustling with resistance bands ("booty bands") during that period
- The point: early-stage entrepreneurship is inherently unglamorous and embarrassing — that's normal

📣 The Mindset Shift: Yell From the Rooftops 0:46

- The feeling of embarrassment comes from being one of the few people in society actually pursuing something real

> "You're embarrassed because you're one of the only people in society actually going after it."

- That embarrassment should be reframed as a badge of honor, not a reason to stay quiet
- The directive: yell from the rooftops about whatever venture you're building
  - In today's competitive arena, you must exhaust every possible resource to ensure your business wins
  - Holding back out of fear of looking try-hard is a luxury serious entrepreneurs cannot afford