- 📊 Overall Daily Eating Pattern

⏰ Morning: Fasting Until 1–2 PM 0:00

- Brandon starts his day eating nothing at all
  - He fasts until approximately 1 PM or 2 PM
  - Reason: he feels that eating early slows down his productivity and work pace
    - "আমার মনে হয় খেলে আমার কাজের গতি কিছুটা কমে যায়" ("I feel that eating slows my work pace a little")

🥤 Breaking the Fast: First Meal 0:00

- The first meal after breaking the fast is intentionally light
  - Option 1: a protein shake
  - Option 2: some macadamia nuts
    - Macadamia nuts are a keto-friendly high-fat snack, fitting the low-carb framework

🏋️ Workout & Post-Workout Shake 0:00

- After the light first meal, he performs his workout
- Immediately following the workout, he has another protein shake
  - Protein shakes serve as convenient, low-carb protein sources between meals

🥩 Dinner: Ribeye Steak 0:23

- Dinner is the main substantial meal of the day
  - Either eaten out at a restaurant or cooked at home
  - His go-to dinner: ribeye steak, eaten in as large a quantity as possible
    - Ribeye is high in fat and protein, making it ideal for keto

🌙 Before Bed: Final Protein Shake 0:23

- Before sleeping, he likely has one more protein shake
  - This is described as a probable/typical habit rather than a strict rule

📊 Overall Daily Eating Pattern 0:23

- He typically eats only one or maybe two actual meals per day
- Between those meals, protein intake is maintained through shakes
- The structure combines intermittent fasting with a keto diet:
  - Skip breakfast entirely
  - Light break-fast meal (shake or macadamia nuts) around 1–2 PM
  - Workout
  - Post-workout protein shake
  - Dinner (ribeye steak — at home or restaurant)
  - Pre-bed protein shake

> The core philosophy: fewer meals, high protein maintained via shakes throughout the day, and a fat-rich keto dinner as the primary food event.
