

The Destructive Habits Of Poor People (Story)

Channel: Onem · Published: Sep 11, 2026 · Watch: <https://www.youtube.com/shorts/SljfyHzmUzM> Source: full transcript

Executive Summary

Filmed at a ski resort in Granada, the speaker reflects on how poor kids develop low-value habits while wealthy kids build high-leverage skills — and says his only regret in life is not acting on what he already knew, sooner.

Contents

-  The Triggering Moment: Granada Ski Resort
-  Poor Habits vs. Wealthy Habits
- 😞 The Speaker's Only Regret
- 💪 Doubling Down Now
- 🔒 How the System Keeps You Behind

The Triggering Moment: Granada Ski Resort 0:00

- The speaker was staying at the Vincci, a five-star hotel at a ski resort in Granada, with his girlfriend
 - Woke up at 5:00 a.m., had a coffee, and watched young kids skiing down the mountain
 - Later went out for breakfast and observed groups of 14–18-year-old kids skiing
- This scene triggered a sharp realization about the difference in how poor vs. wealthy kids spend their time

Poor Habits vs. Wealthy Habits 0:22

- The speaker identifies "poor people habits" — things he did growing up — as low-leverage activities:
 - Going out and getting drunk
 - Watching football and sports
 - Playing football and rugby (fun, but not skill-building in a financial sense)
 - Chasing women / meeting friends at the pub
 - Playing FIFA or Call of Duty on Saturday nights
- Meanwhile, wealthy kids were building genuinely useful, compounding skills:
 - Learning to speak multiple languages
 - Taking extra courses on how a CEO manages a business
 - Attending wealthy schools with specialized enrichment programs
 - Flying to places like St. Moritz or Chamonix to ski and network with millionaires and billionaires

- The speaker is careful not to blame his mother: "my mom worked her bollocks off — there's nothing she could do. She couldn't put me in one of those schools if she tried. They're too expensive."
 - He explicitly says he holds no one accountable — it's about priorities, not blame

😞 The Speaker's Only Regret 1:09

- When people ask his one regret in life, his answer is consistent and specific:
 - Everything he was teaching others and doing himself was correct — "100% right, 200% right"
 - His regret is simply that he didn't do it more, sooner
- He knew at the time that he should have been:
 - Learning Spanish instead of playing football
 - Learning how to trade instead of drinking with friends
 - Focusing on business instead of social distractions
- He describes the internal conflict: people around him told him "You need to go out more. You need to enjoy yourself. You need to have more fun." — and he admits he sometimes doubted himself, even though deep down he knew he was right

💪 Doubling Down Now 1:51

- The speaker describes his current Friday night: doing hill sprints, planning to hit the gym, then working on his business — while most people are out drinking
- His mindset now: because he's confirmed these habits pay off, he's committing even harder
 - "I'm going to double down. I know that these things pay off in the future and that's how you get a better life."
- The lesson: once you know something works, the correct move is to do it more, not moderate it

🔒 How the System Keeps You Behind 2:35

- Being poor — and particularly not having a stable two-parent family — "puts you a few paces behind"
 - Wealthy kids get access to skill-building, travel, and elite social networks from a young age
 - Poor kids get cultural habits (sports, drinking, entertainment) that feel normal but don't compound
- The speaker frames this as structural: "This is how they keep you down"
 - Not a conspiracy, but a natural result of environment, access, and the habits modelled around you
- The implicit takeaway: awareness of the gap is the first step — once you see it, you can consciously choose higher-leverage activities regardless of your starting point