

How I Broke Hinge and got Infinite Dates (too easy lol)

Channel: Deni Ops · Published: Aug 09, 2026 · Watch: <https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=unV9XxgADcg> Source: full transcript

Executive Summary

Deni walks through his exact Hinge profile setup — AI-generated photos, prompt strategy, and texting framework — claiming it produces constant incoming likes and two dates per day.

Contents

-  The Five Questions Women Ask When Seeing a Profile
-  Photo-by-Photo Breakdown (Deni's Profile)
-  AI-Generated Photos: The Core Cheat Code
-  Profile Niche and Target Audience
-  Prompt Strategy (Max's Profile)
-  Voice Prompts and Accent as Novelty
-  Hinge App Strategy and Algorithm Behavior
-  Commenting and Opening Strategy
-  Texting Strategy and Date Conversion (Emily Case Study)
-  Final Takeaways and Proof of Results

The Five Questions Women Ask When Seeing a Profile 0:22

- Every photo decision should be made by answering these five questions a woman subconsciously asks:
 - Am I physically attracted to him?
 - What does his life look like — do I want to be a part of it?
 - Does this guy present himself like he has taste?
 - Is he being cringey or trying too hard?
 - What would dating him day-to-day feel like?
- These questions drive the entire photo and prompt strategy — each asset should answer at least one of them positively.

Photo-by-Photo Breakdown (Deni's Profile) 0:44

- Photo 1 — Asleep on a boat/yacht (AI-generated candid)
 - Intentionally shows eyes, jawline, and a hint of abs
 - Looks effortless and abroad — triggers lifestyle envy ("I wish I was lying next to you")

- Appears candid and caught-in-the-moment, not posed or try-hard
- Travel/side-stopper effect: girls imagine themselves in the scene
- Photo 2 — Smiling in a restaurant (AI-generated from a model's photo)
 - Caption: "Dating me will look like this" — sells the date experience directly
 - Focus on style, expression, good hygiene, well-fitted clothing that shows physique
 - Shows vascular arm, watch on wrist, aesthetically pleasing background
 - Source image taken from a model; AI used to adapt it to his likeness
 - Quote: "I literally just stole a picture from a guy that's a model, bro. And now I get results like you saw at the start of the video with hundreds of likes."
- Photo 3 — In bed working (day-in-the-life shot)
 - Hood up, working on laptop in bed
 - Projects "breadwinner husband" or locked-in energy
 - Triggers imagination of what it would feel like to be next to him
 - Generates conversation starters ("Can I be in bed with you?")
- Photo 4 — Restaurant shot (AI-generated)
 - Soft expressions, boyfriend-material energy
 - Jewelry, ring, aesthetic environment — sells the dream-date fantasy
 - "Gentleman husband vibe" at a nice restaurant
- Photo 5 — Boat/lounge picture in designer boxers (AI-generated)
 - Designer brand (Supreme) visible — increases sexual and status appeal
 - Abs showing but hands placed over them deliberately — so expectations in person aren't unrealistic
 - Quote: "You have to do these pictures in a very high IQ way. If you do it a high IQ way, you're not going to have any problems."
- Photo 6 — Simple selfie (real photo)
 - Included because girls were calling him "too good to be true" or fake
 - Provides authenticity anchor alongside AI images
 - Tall posture, good smile, well-dressed — still aesthetically solid without camera tricks

AI-Generated Photos: The Core Cheat Code 1:33

- AI photos are framed as the single biggest unlock for Hinge results
- Even self-described "Chads" are using AI — if they are and you're not, you're at a disadvantage
- Referenced case study: a 5'3" Asian man they helped who got thousands of likes using this approach
- Key technique: find a model whose look you want to emulate, use AI to transpose your face/features
- Result: able to show off physique, style, and lifestyle without expensive shoots or actual travel
- The candid, effortless aesthetic is what makes AI photos believable — they shouldn't look posed
- Mix in at least one real photo to neutralize "you're fake" accusations

Profile Niche and Target Audience 5:13

- Deni's profile is described as a hybrid of "daddy energy" and "degen energy"
 - Designed to attract women who are dependent, submissive, or spontaneous
- Key point: your photos must match the type of woman you want to attract
 - Different niche = different photo aesthetic and prompt tone
- Max's profile as contrast: "rave god degeneracy" aesthetic aimed at rave/party girls
 - Different vibe, same principle — match the imagery to the target audience

Prompt Strategy (Max's Profile) 5:58

- Prompt 1: "I'm really really attracted to rave girls"
 - Niche-targets a specific type of woman who self-selects in
 - Generated responses like "I'm a rave girl, come find me at a rave" — signals first-date intent
- Prompt 2: "Unusual skills: Crazy sense of direction"
 - Framed as broadly appealing because most women joke about having no sense of direction
 - Gets women to message first — example responses shown: "I'd get lost in my own house", "Good, I've got no sense of direction"
- Prompt 3: "The same type of weird if you love The Notebook"
 - Taps into a romance novel/film women already love
 - Creates instant conversation topic — example: girl replied she'd never seen it, which still opened dialogue
- General prompt principle: use prompts that are specific enough to trigger a self-identification response, making the woman message first

Voice Prompts and Accent as Novelty 7:25

- Max (Northern Irish accent) uses a voice prompt — novelty of the accent drives responses
- Deni uses his strong British accent as a differentiator in his area (Manchester)
- Principle: if you have an unusual or foreign-sounding accent relative to your location, use a voice prompt — it adds novelty and personality that text can't convey
- Observation: British accent in the US would be similarly effective; American accent in the UK works the same way

Hinge App Strategy and Algorithm Behavior 8:09

- Hinge ≠ Tinder — different algorithm, different behavior, different texting norms
- Swipe volume matters: Hinge rewards heavy usage — Deni claims 13 hours of screen time in one week swiping

- Algorithm observation: Hinge tracks which profiles you like and serves you more of the same type
 - Practical implication: only swipe right on women you actually want — swiping on lower-quality profiles trains the algorithm to show more of those
- Hinge Plus recommended:
 - Unlocks unlimited likes
 - Allows you to view and match all incoming likes
 - Without it, high-volume incoming likes are unmanageable
- At the advanced stage described, incoming likes are so high that outbound swiping is nearly unnecessary

Commenting and Opening Strategy 9:37

- Hinge allows commenting directly on a specific photo or prompt when sending a like
- Commenting (vs. just liking) creates a higher match/response rate
- Custom openers tailored to something in her profile outperform generic lines
- If stuck, use a pre-built texting framework (referenced but not fully detailed in this video)
- Live example given: girl's prompt said "I'm obsessed with feet" → opener: "I have the two men just for you" (referencing himself and Max)
- Key mechanic: mirror or reference her own prompt language back to her — it shows you actually read her profile

Texting Strategy and Date Conversion (Emily Case Study) 10:25

- Texting tone on Hinge: more conservative than Tinder
 - Hinge moderates more aggressively — Deni was banned for sending a mildly sexual message
 - Escalation should happen off-app (move to Instagram or phone calls first)
- Full Emily (Liverpool) case study — step by step:
 - Her prompt: "Something you immediately assume about me"
 - Max's opener: "I assume you're more silly or funny because you're blonde" — playful but not insulting
 - Avoided the obvious insult ("dumb blonde") and reframed it positively
 - She responded warmly: "I say so, don't take much serious"
 - Matched her energy: hearted her response, replied "You're a free spirit. It's a match made in heaven"
 - She pushed for the date herself: "I skip the small talk. Go on a real date to see if we hit each other"
 - They complimented her and confirmed interest, she offered her schedule (free all week) and gave her Instagram
 - Moved immediately to Instagram DMs — no prolonged app texting
 - Saved her as "Emily Liverpool" in contacts
 - Dry, direct tone — no excessive flirting
 - Max sent voice notes leveraging his Northern Irish accent to boost attraction and handle logistics

- She requested a phone call to see if they get along — they complied
- Date settled on Wednesday night in Southport (her location)
- Date confirmation: Max stood by the barrier at the train station
- Date photos shown: holding hands, visited a pub — her tattoos visible matching her Hinge profile (proof of legitimacy)
- Core texting principles extracted:
 - Move fast — Hinge girls have high intent and move quickly
 - Get off the app as soon as possible (Instagram or phone)
 - Go straight to logistics — don't be a "texting buddy"
 - Use voice notes to add personality and stand out
 - Match her energy rather than over-pursuing

✓ Final Takeaways and Proof of Results 14:11

- Claims to currently be going on two dates per day sourced from Hinge
- Incoming likes described as unmanageable — 17+ unread conversations at time of filming
- Has helped men he describes as: 5'3", 40 years old, conventionally unattractive — and achieved results with them
- Referenced 5'3" Asian client who got thousands of likes after profile optimization
- Emphasizes that AI photos remove almost every traditional excuse (looks, travel, lifestyle)
- Final hierarchy of importance:
 - Photos = by far the most impactful lever
 - Prompts = meaningful secondary boost (especially for getting women to message first)
 - Everything else (bio details, basic info) = minor optimization, largely irrelevant

"If Chad is using AI and you're not, you're [behind]. It's literally a cheat code. Even if you're not Chad."