

Why I leave Miami every month.

Channel: Tim Luong · Published: Aug 10, 2026 · Watch: https://www.youtube.com/shorts/5_501b5Lbwg Source: full transcript

Executive Summary

Tim Luong leaves Miami once a month to visit cities like New York, meet entrepreneurs and business owners, keep a pulse on industry trends, and reset mentally before returning home to work.

Contents

-  Monthly City-Hopping Routine
-  Networking as a Competitive Advantage
-  The Mental Reset Cycle

Monthly City-Hopping Routine 0:00

- Tim makes it a habit to leave Miami once a month to visit a different city
 - Example destination mentioned: New York, where he has a batch of meetings lined up
- The purpose is to deliberately "switch it up" rather than stay in one place indefinitely

Networking as a Competitive Advantage 0:00

- He uses these trips to catch up with entrepreneurs and business owners in other cities
 - Goal: see what's working in other people's businesses
 - Keeping a "pulse" on what's happening with peers and competitors in his space
- His view: the best way to stay informed is to build a network and constantly stay in touch
 - Observing what others are doing keeps you sharp and competitive in your own business

The Mental Reset Cycle 0:23

- Beyond business intel, the trips serve as an idea reset
 - Getting out of the usual environment sparks fresh thinking
- His described cycle in his own words:
 - Lock in
 - Go network and meet people
 - Reset mentally and idea-wise
 - Go back home

- Grind