Stock that used to last us months now lasts us minutes. #mindset #successstory #entrepreneur

Channel: Greg Lav · Published: Oct 16, 2026 · Watch: https://www.youtube.com/shorts/VqqB5F6N_54 Source: full transcript

📋 Executive Summary

Greg Lav contrasts Bloom's humble 2019 beginnings — 2,500 units worth $20,000 lasting months — with today's reality: 900,000 cans of Bloom energy drink that won't last 12 hours of sales.

📑 Contents

- 🚀 The Launch Milestone & Origin Story
- 📦 Then vs. Now: Inventory Scale
- 🏭 Current Operations & Global Footprint
- 💡 Mindset Reflection

🚀 The Launch Milestone & Origin Story 0:00

- Greg marks July 2024 as the pivotal moment when Bloom launched its energy drink line
  - He describes it as "a turning point in our entire lives"
  - He calls it their "crazy ambition" — something they had dreamed about for years
- The brand itself started much earlier, with its first product order placed in 2019

📦 Then vs. Now: Inventory Scale 0:00

Metric	2019 (First Order)	Today
Units ordered	2,500 units	900,000 cans on hand
Dollar value	~$20,000	Not stated
How long stock lasted	Weeks to months of sales	Less than 12 hours

- The first Bloom product order in 2019 was 2,500 units worth approximately $20,000
  - Greg emphasizes: "That was truly all we had"
  - That single order sustained the business for weeks, possibly months
- Today, looking at 900,000 cans of Bloom Sparkling Energy, that entire quantity wouldn't even cover a full day of demand
  - Specifically: "not enough for even 12 hours of our inventory now"

🏭 Current Operations & Global Footprint 0:22

- Bloom now operates 11 facilities across the United States
- An additional 3 to 5 facilities in the UK and EU, reflecting international expansion
- The scale of these warehouses/distribution centers is what makes 900,000 units a sub-12-hour supply

💡 Mindset Reflection 0:22

- Greg says he shares this visual proof deliberately — he keeps telling his audience about the growth but believes people (and he himself) need to see it
  - "I try to show you because I keep telling you and I think we need to see that"
  - He admits candidly: "Honestly, sometimes I need to see it too"
- The underlying message is one of perspective and motivation: revisiting how far a business has come is a tool for sustaining ambition and gratitude

> "Stock that used to last us months now lasts us minutes" — the clearest single line capturing Bloom's exponential growth trajectory.