

The truth about the book The Secret 🤔📖

Channel: Brandon Carter · Published: Jul 20, 2026 · Watch: https://www.youtube.com/shorts/_-ekzIV_fjw Source: full transcript

📋 Executive Summary

Brandon Carter argues The Secret is overhyped because it omits the core principle from its own source material — Wallace D. Wattles' "do all that can be done each day" — without which the law of attraction is incomplete and ineffective.

📄 Contents

- 📖 The Secret's Hidden Source
- 💡 The Missing Principle: Do All That Can Be Done Each Day
- ✅ Why This Standard Is So Hard — and So Powerful

📖 The Secret's Hidden Source 0:00

- Carter labels The Secret as a book that "wasted my time" — placing it in the overhyped category
- He does not dismiss the law of attraction outright
 - His objection is specifically that the book misrepresents how it works
- Legend holds that author Rhonda Byrne was inspired by an older book: The Science of Getting Rich by Wallace D. Wattles
 - Carter's recommendation: skip The Secret and read Wattles' original instead
- Key reason: The Secret left out one critical idea that Wattles emphasizes repeatedly
 - Wattles repeated this single principle over 50 times throughout his book

💡 The Missing Principle: Do All That Can Be Done Each Day 0:23

- The omitted principle, quoted directly from Wattles:

"Do all that can be done each day."

- Carter unpacks each word carefully:
 - "All that can be done" — not working hard, not grinding, not hustling
 - It means working at full capacity — your personal maximum output
 - "Each day" — not sometimes, not most of the time, not a lot
 - It means every single day: weekends, birthdays, Christmas, no exceptions

- His conclusion: "If you do all that can be done each day, there's no way you can fail. It's literally impossible."

✓ Why This Standard Is So Hard — and So Powerful 0:46

- Carter acknowledges almost nobody actually meets this standard
- He uses failed personal goals as a diagnostic tool:
 - Ask yourself: did you do all you could do, every day, toward that goal?
 - Honest answer for most people: no — effort was inconsistent or below capacity
- The distinction he draws:
 - Working hard sometimes ≠ doing all you can do each day
 - Sporadic effort, even intense effort, falls short of the Wattles standard
- Takeaway: the law of attraction, as Carter sees it, requires pairing visualization/mindset with relentless daily maximum action — the ingredient The Secret left on the cutting room floor