

The Henry Girard Lifestyle

Channel: Onem · Published: Aug 14, 2026 · Watch: <https://www.youtube.com/shorts/legAzlETksA> Source: full transcript

Executive Summary

The creator has just finished a ~2-hour video on "tier three cities" and argues that rising costs, taxes, immigration pressure, and cultural change are killing tier-one cities — while places like Budva (Montenegro) and Eastern Europe now offer a superior lifestyle and economic opportunity.

Context: Just Finished a Big Recording Session 0:00

- Creator just wrapped recording what he estimates was a ~2-hour video (possibly 1.5 hours) on tier three cities
 - Visibly sweating from the intensity/length of the session
- The video covers Eastern European countries, South American destinations, lifestyle design, and how to set your life up abroad
- He describes being reminded how passionate he is about this topic: "I forgot how much I love that topic"

The Henry Girard Lifestyle Explained 0:22

- "Henry Girard" is a character from the film War Dogs
 - Portrayed as someone fluent in multiple languages, living and traveling through places like Albania, and operating internationally
 - Creator first encountered this character at age 24 and was deeply influenced by it
- The lifestyle archetype blends the James Bond traveler with the Bond villain — international, multilingual, operating from unexpected places
 - Creator says he fell in love with James Bond at age 14 (specifically Casino Royale)
 - But now, at the time of recording, he finds the Bond villain archetype "way cooler"
- Key scene referenced from War Dogs:

- Henry Girard is in Las Vegas with Jonah Hill's character
- Jonah Hill says: "I have to get out of here" — implying Vegas
- Girard leans in and says: "I was talking about America."
- Creator says this line "hit me hard" at 24 and planted the seed for his worldview shift

Why Tier-One Cities Are Declining 0:22

- Creator says he loved tier-one cities for years and still acknowledges they are "amazing" and "so much fun"
- However, multiple converging factors are causing their decline:
 - Cost of living rising sharply
 - Taxes — governments becoming "greedy"
 - Immigration changing the cultural fabric
 - People leaving — as residents depart, culture erodes
- His framework: as people leave a tier-one city, it gradually becomes a tier-two city, then eventually a tier-three
 - "It slowly dies because the culture has changed and the people aren't there anymore"
- This is described as a historical pattern — tier-one and tier-three cities have swapped roles throughout history
 - The current moment is framed as an acceleration of this process, happening "more than ever"

The Pole Shift: Tier Threes Are Taking Over 1:10

- Creator uses the metaphor of a "pole shift" — a geographic/magnetic reversal — to describe what's happening to global city hierarchies
 - Tier-one cities become tier-threes over time; previously underdeveloped cities rise
- He frames this as a "changing of the guard" happening right now
- Acknowledges this has precedent throughout history but says the speed of change today is unprecedented
- Notes that even his own views shifted rapidly: "probably 2 years ago I was correct about tier one cities" — but things have since changed "drastically"
- Also mentions that his own platform/travels with Onem contributed to his perspective shift
- Adds a note about suppression: "We are being super suppressed" — though this is not elaborated further in this clip

The Opportunity Right Now 1:58

- Creator's core argument: there has never been a better time to pursue the Henry Girard / Bond villain lifestyle
- Specific comparison made:
 - Working remotely on a laptop from a place like Budva, Montenegro (a tier-three city)

- vs. living in New York earning $100K/year
- The Budva option is framed as objectively superior for quality of life and financial leverage
- Even a standard 9-to-5 remote job in a low-cost tier-three city is presented as a winning formula
- The implication: geographic arbitrage (earning in strong currencies, spending in weak-currency environments) is the key lever
- Regions specifically mentioned as targets: Eastern Europe, South America

Timeline and What's Coming 2:43

- Creator predicts the full shift will have occurred by 2030
 - Described as an accelerating, near-term event, not a distant future scenario
- The ~2-hour full video covering all of this in depth is teased as upcoming content
 - "You guys are going to love it"
- This short is essentially a post-recording hype/reaction clip — the detailed breakdown is in the longer video yet to be published
