

The fastest way to kill you dreams #businessgrowth #motivation #sucessjourney #mindset #successboost

Channel: Greg Lav · Published: Oct 08, 2026 · Watch: <https://www.youtube.com/shorts/fqcDUHMXJfs> Source: full transcript

Executive Summary

Asking others for opinions on your dreams — especially those who've never pursued similar goals — is the fastest way to kill your momentum. Respect people without letting them derail your ambitions.

Contents

- 🎯 The Fastest Way to Kill Your Dreams
- 🤝 Respecting Others Without Letting Them In

🎯 The Fastest Way to Kill Your Dreams 0:00

- The single quickest way to kill your dreams and stop all momentum is asking others for their opinion
 - Most people you ask have never actually done the thing you're trying to do
 - If a person hasn't done it themselves, their opinion on it holds no real value
- This may feel harsh because the people you'd naturally turn to — parents, university professors, respected friends and peers — typically haven't done it either
 - These are people you love and respect, yet their inexperience in your specific ambition makes their input unreliable

🤝 Respecting Others Without Letting Them In 0:22

- You can fully respect someone and still not give them influence over the direction of your biggest ambitions
 - Respect and deference are two different things
 - Keeping someone out of your decision-making process does not mean you value them less as a person

"You can respect someone without allowing them to interfere in the path of your great ambitions. That's okay."

- The key takeaway: protect your momentum by being selective about whose counsel you actually seek — ideally someone who has already done what you're trying to do