

You need a chef

Channel: Tim Luong · Published: Oct 01, 2026 · Watch: <https://www.youtube.com/shorts/kPdyaZ7bSq0> Source: full transcript

Executive Summary

Tim Luong makes the case that hiring a personal chef beats owning a Lamborghini — the chef handles groceries, nutrition tracking, and home organization, freeing up maximum time and mental bandwidth for business.

Contents

- 🚗 The Core Trade-off: Chef vs. Lamborghini
- 🥗 What the Chef Actually Does
- 🧠 The Real Payoff: Time and Focus

The Core Trade-off: Chef vs. Lamborghini 0:00

- Tim faced a direct choice between buying a Lamborghini or hiring a personal chef
 - He chose the personal chef without hesitation, and says he would make that same choice every time
 - The framing positions a chef as a luxury asset that delivers more practical ROI than a status car

What the Chef Actually Does 0:00

- The chef is described as "multi-tasking" — far more than just cooking
 - Grocery shopping: orders all groceries; everything purchased is organic
 - Meal planning: meals are planned with precision and structure
 - Nutrition tracking:
 - Weighs Tim's protein portions individually
 - Tracks every single ingredient that goes into each meal
 - Logs everything into MyFitnessPal on Tim's behalf
 - Tim's only job is to show up at the table and eat
 - Home organization:
 - Cleans and ensures the house is in order
 - Keeps the refrigerator perfectly organized at all times

The Real Payoff: Time and Focus 0:21

- Before hiring the chef, Tim spent 30 minutes browsing food delivery apps to decide what to eat — time now completely eliminated
- The chef saves three distinct resources:
 - Time
 - Physical effort
 - Mental focus / cognitive load
- The freed-up capacity is redirected entirely toward working on his business and achieving more

The chef doesn't just cook food — he removes an entire layer of daily decision-making, letting Tim operate at a higher level.