Why I Wear My Jewelry Every Day

Channel: Brandon Carter · Published: Oct 24, 2026 · Watch: https://www.youtube.com/shorts/I54L0t9ayNQ Source: full transcript

📋 Executive Summary

Brandon Carter argues that jewelry is meant to be worn and enjoyed daily, not locked away — so he deliberately buys durable, practical pieces he can use during workouts, parenting, and everyday life.

📑 Contents

- 💎 His Daily Jewelry Rotation
- ⌚ Watch Philosophy: Titanium vs. Bust-Down AP
- 📿 Cartier Bracelets: Practical Choices by Context
- 🏆 Core Philosophy: Enjoy What You Buy

💎 His Daily Jewelry Rotation 0:00

- Brandon wears his jewelry essentially every day — it is a deliberate lifestyle choice, not occasional
  - Pieces worn regularly include a diamond necklace, at least one watch (AP or Rolex), and at least one Cartier bracelet
- The guiding principle from the start: buy jewelry you will actually wear, not pieces you store

⌚ Watch Philosophy: Titanium vs. Bust-Down AP 0:00

- His titanium watch is described as special — only ~1,000 units made
  - Material choice matters: titanium is super light and durable, making it practical for daily wear including workouts
  - "Work out in it. Ain't no big deal."
- He also owns a "bust down AP" (diamond-covered Audemars Piguet)
  - This piece has significantly more diamonds than the titanium model
  - Valued at approximately $35,000 — yet he still wears it every day
  - The reasoning: at that price point, if it gets damaged, it is not catastrophic

📿 Cartier Bracelets: Practical Choices by Context 0:22

- He wears at least one Cartier bracelet every day, but selects which one based on the situation
  - For low-key or subtle looks: a Cartier bracelet with only four diamonds — described as "the regular one"

    - For time with his son: prefers a bracelet that locks in securely and is priced around $11,000
        - Rationale: if it gets damaged or lost while with his child, the financial loss is manageable
- Context-aware accessorizing — matching the piece to the risk level and setting of the day

🏆 Core Philosophy: Enjoy What You Buy 0:46

- Explicit takeaway directed at viewers: "If you're going to make an investment in jewelry, buy that you can wear a lot."
- "Enjoy the fruits of your labor. Don't leave it just on..." (clip ends)
- The underlying message: luxury items have no value sitting unworn — the return on investment is the daily enjoyment
    - Prioritize durability and wearability when selecting pieces
    - Choose price points you are comfortable with in real-world conditions (workouts, kids, etc.)