watch this before you enter 2027

Channel: Greg Lav · Published: Oct 24, 2026 · Watch: https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=FcEyCJqUdkk Source: full transcript

📋 Executive Summary

Greg and Leo argue that fear in 2026 is not survival-based but ego-based, that shame from irrelevant people is the only real obstacle, and that relentless action — thriving in rejection, hunger, and discomfort — is the only path into 2027 as a "bulletproof" person.

📑 Contents

- 🎤 The Stage Story That Started the Conversation
- 😨 Fear in 2026 Is a 300-Year-Old Relic
- 🍽️ Reframing Discomfort: The Hunger-and-No Analogy
- 🏆 Bloom's Public Wins, Losses, and the Trophy Case Mindset
- 🤡 Write Down the Names You're Afraid Of
- 📱 Greg's Personal Brand Fear — and Why He Did It Anyway
- 🔑 The Anonymous Beast Superpower
- 👥 Audit Your Environment: Move If You Have To
- ⏳ Boredom Breeds Fear — Passion Kills It
- ✅ The 2027 Action Plan

🎤 The Stage Story That Started the Conversation 0:00

- Greg was speaking at an event for up-and-coming entrepreneurs and intrapreneurs
- An audience member pointed to Bloom's public can-count display (counting toward 600 million cans) and asked: "What happens if that slows down? Everyone will know Bloom is slowing down — won't that be shameful?"
  - Greg's answer: "That means I have work to do."
- The question triggered a reflection on the common thread Greg notices across:
  - DM conversations on Tuesday nights (where he gives out his phone number and chats for 20 minutes)
  - Emails from followers
  - In-person conversations at Expos
  - "90% of the time the through line is: you're just scared."
- Greg's thesis for the video: 2027 cannot be entered as a coward — there are roughly 2.5 months left and that inner coward needs to be killed now.

😨 Fear in 2026 Is a 300-Year-Old Relic 0:46

- The fear response is biologically wired for survival threats that existed 300 years ago — when your family could literally die
- Today's realistic worst case: "Leo and I move into his dad's basement" — and they've lived there before, so it's not even that bad
- The actual most expensive risk is the cost of regret
  - Being 60 years old and saying, "I let the fear of shame stop me from going after my dreams"
- The only people who will shame you are "Janice" — a metaphor for someone who has spent their entire life in a cubicle under fluorescent lights
  - True value-creators only judge you for giving up — not for trying and failing publicly

> "Either you cure the fear or the opportunity goes away. Either the fear goes away or the opportunity does. Action is the answer."

🍽️ Reframing Discomfort: The Hunger-and-No Analogy 2:45

- Leo introduces the dieting analogy:
  - First time dieting: hunger feels like something is wrong
  - Second time dieting: hunger is recognized as proof the diet is working — a "negative-positive feedback loop" where the unpleasant sensation is reframed as a signal of progress
- Greg extends this to career fears, specifically the fear of being told "no" in sales:
  - He would build lists of 500–1,000 people, email them all at once with one click
  - Early on: "pit in my stomach" when hitting send
  - Result: ~50 replies, maybe 1 client
  - Over time, the sensation of sending became associated with meeting cool people and landing clients
  - The shift required: systems + repetition + action to morph fear into positive association
- Alex Hormozi reference: in his sales room, Hormozi would start each day by rallying the team with "Let's go get some no's"
  - Reframed the inevitable hang-ups so morale didn't crash on the first three calls
  - Scoreboard became: "Yo, I got 50 no's" = "You made 50 calls" — a win
- Bloom's own example: pitching Target, Walmart, Costco, and Amazon — they say no more than yes, even at Bloom's level
- The principle: thrive in the no (sales) and thrive in the hunger (fitness) — fear of stepping forward is actually a signal you are leaving the status quo

🏆 Bloom's Public Wins, Losses, and the Trophy Case Mindset 1:58

- Bloom's product evolution was publicly messy:

- Started as a pre-workout company → protein powder → greens company → 300+ products later released Bloom Energy
- The prior 299 were partial public wins that slowed — some called them "blips"
- Greg's reframe: "It wasn't a blip because we never gave up."

- Specific public L example: Juicy Orange flavor of Bloom Energy was removed from Walmart
  - Greg's read: nobody talks trash about Bloom online for taking those L's because the W's are bigger
- Trophy case analogy:
  - Nobody comes into your house and takes the trophies out of your trophy case
  - Even Lance Armstrong — caught doping — still has his Tour de France trophies
  - "Business is not drug tested, so don't worry about that"
- Leo's compounding-knowledge framing:
  - If Bloom stopped at 600 million cans, the next business would sell a billion of something because they already know how to sell half a billion
  - All the learnings, education, and mistakes are embedded in that number — they don't disappear
- Accountability as a feature, not a bug:
  - The best CEOs run publicly traded companies — everyone knows their company's worth in real time
  - They are the best because they thrive in that accountability and pressure

🤡 Write Down the Names You're Afraid Of 5:46

- Greg's challenge: write down every person whose judgment is stopping you
  - Prediction: there will be about 5 names
  - 3 of them will be people from high school you haven't spoken to in years
  - 2 of them will be people who, once you see their names written down, you'll realize: "I'm letting Janice from Kansas control my life?"
- The core absurdity: you are allowing people who do not have the life you want to judge the path you're taking toward the life you want
  - "If somebody doesn't have the life that you want, why are you allowing them to judge your life?"
- Greg's fears are written down and then laughed at — that's the prescribed action

📱 Greg's Personal Brand Fear — and Why He Did It Anyway 6:32

- Greg was afraid to make content despite:
  - Living with a content creator
  - Being married to an influencer
  - Working with thousands of creators
  - Knowing JJ (behind the camera) was pushing him
- His first videos: "super lame" by his own admission — he leaves them up publicly

- His filter for caring about criticism: does the critic have the life I want?
  - If no → their opinion is irrelevant
  - Anyone who judged those early videos is either someone whose opinion he doesn't value or someone who isn't living the life he aspires to
- He used to need anti-anxiety medication before store pitches or speaking on stage
  - Fix: deliberately filling his day with things that made him uncomfortable
    - Changing morning routine
    - Changing workout
    - Changing diet
    - Posting more on Instagram
  - Result: all those fears revealed themselves as fake — they boiled down to shame about things that posed no real physical threat

🔑 The Anonymous Beast Superpower 16:21

- "There is no greater superpower than being an anonymous beast"
- When nobody knows who you are:
  - You have nothing to lose — this is the asset, not the liability
  - You're not constrained by reputation or existing business risk
  - The arena doors are wide open
- Contrast: if Bloom collapsed tomorrow, that fear of reputational damage might stop Greg from launching bold new ideas — the anonymous person has no such constraint
- Leo's framing: going up against people with more experience requires inner belief as the equalizer; anonymity also means no one has pre-judged your ceiling
- "You are a nobody and I mean that as the greatest compliment I could ever give you."

👥 Audit Your Environment: Move If You Have To 12:36

- Greg's diagnosis: if you're afraid of taking L's publicly, you may not be surrounded by the right people
  - His own support system: wife Leah, Leo, JJ — none of them care when he takes an L; JJ laughs at the L's Greg tells him daily
- Rule Greg lists repeatedly in his "lessons" videos: get out of your hometown
  - You are not around the right people — and you may need to be lonely for a while while you find them
- Greg and Leo's story:
  - Started in New York (Westchester) — surrounded by doctors, lawyers, financiers who thought their career was "lame" and made them feel unsupported and shamed
  - Drove 18 hours to Boulder, Colorado knowing nobody

    - Worked side by side for a year and a half with zero friends in Boulder — Greg was physically apart from his wife for that entire stretch
    - "We could have driven back if it was a bad idea. You can always go back."
- Felipe story (Bloom's Mexico business partner):
    - In Guadalajara, Mexico, ~15 tequilas deep at 1:00 a.m., Felipe explicitly asked Greg and Leo to give him harsh truths as best friends
    - Lesson: you may need to communicate to your existing friends the type of energy and honesty you want — don't assume they know
    - Greg told Leah explicitly: "When these things happen, I want us to laugh about them. I want positive energy around negative outcomes."
- Worst-case scenario visualization: "What's the worst thing the business world could do to us? It's going to be the same as where we started — Mari, Leo, and I having hot dogs at 2:00 a.m. drunk leaving a bar. That cost $8. You can't take that away from us."
- The people you need around you: people who make you feel unstoppable, like it's "just a matter of days" — even when Red Bull, Monster, and Celsius are objectively larger
- Action item for 2027: audit your friend group — this could mean literally moving where you live; start planning now

⏳ Boredom Breeds Fear — Passion Kills It 17:50

- One of the primary ways Greg and Leo have killed the coward inside: they don't have time to worry
    - "People who are bored come up with stuff to worry about"
    - Same dynamic applies to youth, retirees, and anyone not passionate about their daily work
- When you are not passionate about your day-to-day, your idle mind fills with:
    - What others think of you
    - Conflicts happening overseas
    - Political news
    - What to have for lunch (and thinking about it for an hour)
- Greg's version of focus: eats chicken and fruit, wears the same white t-shirt every day — decision fatigue eliminated so mental bandwidth goes to Bloom, his son, and his wife
- The momentum flywheel:
    - Start taking action → get some wins → get some yes's on sales calls → body has no space left for negativity
    - Surround yourself with others pursuing their passions → that becomes your new normal → fear becomes structurally impossible
- Leo's systems-over-perception reframe (at age 31 vs. their 20s):
    - Focus on the how — "I need to make 1,000 calls this week" — not on how you're perceived by people who don't care about you

    - Obsessing over perception "can ruin you" and wastes cognitive resources that could go to execution
- The Bloom Juicy Orange Walmart removal is the lived example: they took the L publicly, kept going, and no one online is dragging them because the wins dwarf the losses

✅ The 2027 Action Plan 20:07

- Greg's closing prescribed steps:
    - Step 1: Write down the names of every person you're afraid will shame you
    - Step 2: Write down the specific fears you are afraid of feeling
    - Step 3: Laugh at them — actually laugh
    - Step 4: Take the first action toward your dream
    - Step 5: Allow that momentum to compound into 2027 so you enter the year already moving
- The goal: enter 2027 "bulletproof" — momentum makes you so full of forward motion that negativity literally has no room to land
- Final instruction: "Let the coward die. Tell that coward inside of you that they are no longer welcome here."
- Closing mantra (from Greg's wife): "Get after it."