🚨 The Most Common Mistake in the $1M–$3M Range 0:00

- The most common mistake Tim sees among business owners in the $1M–$3M annual revenue range is losing focus — what he calls "shiny object syndrome."
  - The pattern: business starts to thrive, then the owner launches a second business instead of doubling down on the first.
  - When they come to Tim saying they can't figure out how to scale, he asks what they're doing — and discovers they're juggling two different businesses.
  - The result: they don't have the time or mental bandwidth to actually focus on solving the core problem.

🧠 The Psychology Behind the Pattern 0:21

- The root cause is how business owners respond to hitting a wall or bottleneck in their main business.
  - Instead of learning the skills needed and dedicating focus to break through the bottleneck, the owner starts a new business.
  - The psychological driver: the brain needs to feel productive.
    - Starting something new creates the feeling of "I'm solving things, I'm moving forward."
    - But it's an illusion — the real problem in the core business remains unsolved.

> "I can't solve this, so let me launch another business — because that way I convince myself I'm productive and I'm solving things."

🎯 The Fix: Stay Focused on Your Core Business 0:43

- The solution is straightforward: if you want to earn more money, focus only on your primary business.
  - Recognize when you're experiencing shiny object syndrome rather than genuine opportunity.
  - Invest the time and skill-building effort into the bottleneck you're avoiding.
  - Resist the urge to start new ventures as a substitute for doing the hard work of scaling what already exists.
