Some friends won't survive your next level

Channel: Greg Lav · Published: Oct 17, 2026 · Watch: https://www.youtube.com/shorts/t4pcmE34_0o Source: full transcript

📋 Executive Summary

Leveling up in life means some old friendships won't last. You can invite people to grow alongside you, but if they refuse, moving on without them is sometimes unavoidable.

📑 Contents

- 🕰️ How Previous Generations Handled Friendships
- 🚀 The Reality of Personal Growth and Leaving People Behind
- 🤝 Inviting Others to Join the Journey

🕰️ How Previous Generations Handled Friendships 0:00

- Older generations typically kept high school friends for life
  - They maintained those friendships for decades
  - They did not fully recognize how friendships shape or limit personal transformation
- This approach is not framed as wrong — it simply reflects a different era and mindset

🚀 The Reality of Personal Growth and Leaving People Behind 0:10

- If you are actively working to become a better version of yourself, change is inevitable
  - Over the span of roughly a decade, your values, habits, and goals will shift significantly
- Some people in your current circle will not grow at the same pace or in the same direction
  - As a result, you will have to leave certain people behind
- This is not just a motivational cliché — it is presented as a straightforward truth

> "You hear this from everybody and it's not just a trick — it's the truth."

🤝 Inviting Others to Join the Journey 0:22

- The speaker emphasizes that leaving people behind does not mean abandoning them without warning
  - He personally told friends directly: "I'm going to go try to achieve this ambitious goal"
  - He offered them two clear options:
    - Join him in chasing the big dream together

        - Pursue their own goals in parallel, running alongside him on their own path
- If friends choose neither option, he believes parting ways is the right and necessary move
    - This is framed as a thoughtful, communicated decision — not a silent drift or sudden cut-off