

Responding to WheatWaffles - 1STMAN

Channel: 1M Vault · Published: Jul 13, 2026 · Watch: <https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=mVQHGCxUUxY> Source: full transcript

Executive Summary

1STMAN responds to WheatWaffles' video challenging the "men peak in their mid-to-late 30s" argument, insisting the concept is valid but contingent on deliberate self-improvement — bad examples like Chandler from Friends miss the point entirely.

Contents

-  Intro & New Setup
-  Who Is WheatWaffles & What's the Beef?
-  The Core Argument: Men Get Better With Age — With a Catch
-  Why Chandler from Friends Is a Bad Example
-  The Male Advantage vs. Female Shelf Life
-  Good Examples: Men Who Actually Put the Work In
-  Why It Takes 6–8 Years to See Real Results
-  1STMAN's Personal Trajectory & Where He's Headed
-  Final Challenge to WheatWaffles

Intro & New Setup 0:00

- Still recovering from COVID — sounds nasal, low energy for watching long videos
- New podcast studio setup: six-seater table (could fit eight), mounted microphone, new Panasonic GH5 camera
 - Chose the GH5 over the GH6 because he can buy three GH5s for the same price and use multiple angles
 - No record time limit on the GH5 — can rant freely
- Rooftop balcony described as having "Parisian vibes" — lower-rise seating, views into town, coffee/tea setup
 - Winter plan: tall tower fires + 4m×4m parasol to cover the area
- Sofa arriving Tuesday — full house tour coming after that
- Supplement company (FirstMan) generating approximately £45,000/month — too much email volume for one person
- Actively looking to hire:
 - Videographer/editor/coordinator (gym vlogs, video editing, email outreach)

- Possibly a PA to handle emails

Who Is WheatWaffles & What's the Beef? 3:49

- Many viewers expected a "beef" video — red pill (1STMAN) vs. black pill (WheatWaffles)
- 1STMAN's position: he doesn't label himself red pill — "I'm just Chris"
- His read on WheatWaffles:
 - Doesn't actually think WheatWaffles is black pill — thinks he's fundamentally red pill
 - In WheatWaffles' interview with Hamza, he was largely agreeing on core points
 - Prediction: the black pill label will become toxic for WheatWaffles over time — brands won't sponsor it, women reject the framing, the community tends to be toxic
- Only watched ~5 minutes of the specific video being responded to — didn't have the attention span for a full black pill video while ill
- Stance on internet beef: "I'd rather see somebody in person and talk it out" — avoids online drama deliberately

The Core Argument: Men Get Better With Age — With a Catch 6:55

- The concept: men peak in their mid-to-late 30s (roughly 35–37 as the ultimate peak)
 - Credits Rollo Tomassi as probably the first to articulate this — has invited him on the podcast
 - 1STMAN sees himself as a major modern proponent — a Google/TikTok search for "what age do men peak" returned 37, citing his article/video
- The critical caveat everyone misses: men get better with age only if they put the work in
 - This is stated repeatedly by both 1STMAN and Hamza in multiple videos
 - It is NOT an automatic biological gift — it requires conscious, sustained effort
- Why most men will actually look worse with age:
 - Modern life is essentially designed to degrade your appearance:
 - Sitting at desks all day → tight hip flexors, worse gait, poor posture
 - Screen time → slack jawline
 - Alcohol → bloating, water retention
 - Excess carbs + sedentary lifestyle → fat gain
 - Indoor living → pale skin, lack of sunlight
 - Video games, late nights → disrupted sleep
 - None of these bad outcomes require discipline — they happen by default
- The asymmetry:
 - Getting fat, looking worse, being unsuccessful = zero discipline required
 - Getting lean, looking better, building success = sustained, deliberate effort

Why Chandler from Friends Is a Bad Example 8:50

- WheatWaffles used Matthew Perry ("Chandler") as an example of a man who looked worse with age
- 1STMAN's rebuttal:
 - Chandler has never publicly committed to a body transformation
 - Never been on the Men's Health cover, never released a workout or diet plan
 - His lifestyle after Friends: accepting dinner invitations, drinking at celebrity parties, no reason to care about macros or body fat at 50M+ net worth
 - "I don't remember him ever going and being like a gym advocate"
- The logical flaw: you can't use someone who never tried as evidence that trying doesn't work
 - Analogy used: "It's impossible to walk forward" — said by someone sitting down and not using their legs
- Hypothetical: if 1STMAN could coach Chandler — gym 6 days/week, clean eating, cut alcohol/sugar, creatine, natural diuretics, TRT given his age — "I guarantee he would look better"
 - And with his money and fame, he'd probably be dating 22-year-old women in Hollywood
- Acknowledges: Chandler is rich and famous — different rules apply, he simply doesn't need to try

The Male Advantage vs. Female Shelf Life 15:59

- Women peak around 22–23 years old
 - Every 5 years, a new wave of 18-year-olds replaces the previous cohort at the top
 - Women can't stop this conveyor belt — it's biological and social
 - Even women who don't work on themselves can look attractive in their late teens/early 20s — it's relatively effortless initially
- Men who reach the top through effort are not replaced on a 5-year cycle
 - Example: if you're worth £10 million, maybe one or two other men reach that level per year — you're a rarity, not easily replaced
 - A successful man can maintain his position until age 50+ if he stays conscious about it
- Example cited: Wayne Lineker — silver fox in Ibiza, good shape (probably on TRT), driving a Bentley, still attracting women
- The key phrase: staying power — men have it if they want it; women structurally do not

Good Examples: Men Who Actually Put the Work In 18:42

- Chris Hemsworth — looks better at 37–38 than he did in his 20s
- The Rock — objectively looks better now; gets up at 5 AM to train
- Jason Statham — consistently improved; hard to argue he looked better young
- Mark Wahlberg — nearly 50 years old, still looks "terrific"; worth ~£100M more than in his youth, so higher overall value
- Michael B. Jordan — the centerpiece example:

- Was a "laughingstock" in Hollywood in his mid-20s — the nerdy third wheel in films with Zac Efron
- Underwent major body transformations for Creed, Black Panther, and possibly Fantastic Four
- Now ~34–35 years old, voted sexiest man alive, one of Hollywood's leading men
- "Nobody wanted anything to do with him" at 25–27 — now every woman wants him
- Took conscious effort, not passive aging
- Jack Harlow — cited as a future example to watch:
 - Currently considered average-looking; fame is the main driver of his appeal
 - Recently stopped drinking, started skincare routine, planning to hit the gym
 - Prediction: "watch how much better this guy gets"
- Common thread across all good examples: low body fat, body transformations, sustained effort, probably using steroids/TRT — but crucially, all making effort

Why It Takes 6–8 Years to See Real Results 25:38

- It's not age itself that improves a man — it's the accumulation of time spent working
 - Parallel: back pain at 35 isn't caused by age — it's caused by 10 years of sitting in an office chair without exercise
 - "Time makes you worse" video referenced — habits over time are the real driver
- What takes time to develop:
 - Figuring out your optimal training split (bulking/cutting cycles, progressive overload, calorie/macro tracking)
 - Developing a skincare routine that works for your specific skin — what works for a friend may not work for you
 - Finding your personal style — knowing what cuts, colours, and garments suit your frame
 - Example: spent £250 on shoes recently — been stopped and asked about them ~15 times already
 - Compared to buying £50 shoes on ASOS to save money — the difference is visible
 - Mastering natural diuretics to reduce water weight in the face
 - Learning how sleep affects your appearance — 8–9 consistent hours per night, every night, means by Saturday he looks "fucking amazing"
 - Finding a unique cologne — was nearly charged £200 for a Viking cologne at John Lewis (decided not to buy it on principle, not affordability)
 - Facial hair shaping — knowing exactly where to blend for best results
 - Orthotropics / facial exercises (submentals etc.) for jawline definition
- Estimated timeline: 6–8 years of serious, disciplined effort before "everything comes together"
 - Serious = gym, clean diet, early bedtimes, skincare, real discipline
 - Men who learn faster (e.g. through content like his) can compress this timeline
- Gym longevity myth addressed:

- Hears "10 times a day" from people saying their friend has trained for 8–10 years with no results
- Root cause: not tracking calories, not tracking macros, not using progressive overload
- The gym works — the inputs are just wrong

1STMAN's Personal Trajectory & Where He's Headed 27:01

- Currently 29 years old, at approximately 11% body fat
- Has not yet used testosterone or steroids — "I've got that cheat code at any time"
- Has not completed a full year of maintenance yet — still in cutting phase
 - Plan: get to 10% body fat → maintain for 1 year → build 3–5 kg of muscle during maintenance through consistent training
- Self-assessed weak points still to bring up: neck, glutes, legs (general), traps
- By age 30 (roughly 1 year away) projects:
 - Penthouse ✓, Range Rover ✓, perfect physique frame, complete lifestyle setup
 - Running podcast with big-name guests → connections and social proof
 - Hiring staff → more sleep, more relaxation, more social life, more dating
 - Spent ~£2,000 on clothes recently — notes the attention difference between wearing a £700–800 outfit vs. a tank top is "10x"
- Evidence of improvement cited:
 - Looks better now than 2 years ago, and dramatically better than at 18
 - Has SMP (scalp micropigmentation) for hair — acknowledges it openly
 - Went from "spud face" 2 years ago (having lost previous gains during COVID) to current shape
 - Background: had a sporting background and had lifted weights previously, so his "real" solid accumulation is about 4–5 years

Final Challenge to WheatWaffles 21:21

- Direct challenge issued to WheatWaffles (and anyone watching):

"Go and show me an example of a guy who's put work in, who looks worse. I don't think it can be done."

- Conditions of the challenge:
 - Must be a man who hit the gym consistently
 - Did not abuse steroids to the point of injury (e.g. Ronnie Coleman excluded)
 - Stayed disciplined — no alcohol, clean diet, proper sleep
 - Was worse-looking in his mid-to-late 30s / early 40s than at 21
- Concession: men who had exceptional youthful looks (e.g. Justin Bieber) and then lost their hair might be edge cases — but even then, if they built success and physique alongside it, they'd be a better overall version

- Final summary of his position:
 - The "men peak later" argument is not claiming life automatically makes you better
 - It's claiming that time is required to build all the components (physique, style, finances, framing, social life) — and 35–37 is when a disciplined man has had enough time to assemble everything
 - Using a celebrity who never tried as a counterexample is "lazy" and "silly"
 - The full recipe for any 21-year-old to guarantee improvement: stop drinking alcohol, gym consistently, natural diuretics, clean diet, 8 hours sleep, skincare routine, develop fashion sense, build finances and life setup/framing — "impossible to tell me that guy is going to be worse"