📋 Executive Summary

Brandon Carter rates six popular foods on a 1–10 leanness scale, rewarding high-protein, low-calorie options and docking points whenever extra ingredients (mayo, fillers, breading) add unnecessary calories.

📄 Contents

- 🥚 Deviled Eggs
- 🦀 Crab Cakes
- 🌶️ Stuffed Peppers
- 🍴 Chicken Kebabs
- 🐟 Ceviche
- 🥗 Egg Salad

🥚 Deviled Eggs 0:00

- Rating: 6/10
 - Plain eggs would be close to perfect for a lean diet — high protein, naturally low calorie
 - The "deviled" preparation means adding extra ingredients (fillings, toppings) that pile on calories you don't need when trying to get lean
 - Quote: "That's what the devil would do — take something perfect and then make it bad."

🦀 Crab Cakes 0:10

- Rating: 4/10
 - The word "cake" in the name is the giveaway — binding agents and fillers are added to turn crab meat into a cake form, driving up calorie count
 - Plain crab meat by itself would score a 10/10 — essentially pure protein with very little fat

🌶️ Stuffed Peppers 0:28

- Rating: 8/10 — but only if stuffed correctly
 - Recommended filling: ground beef and a small amount of cheese

- Keeping the filling simple and protein-focused maintains a lean, high-protein meal
- Quote: "If you stuff it right... you gonna be in good shape."

Chicken Kebabs 0:36

- Rating: 9/10
 - Typically made with chicken breast — very high in protein and extremely lean
 - Vegetables like peppers are usually skewered alongside, adding nutrients without significant calories
 - Considered a near-perfect lean meal with very little downside

Ceviche 0:43

- Rating: 10/10
 - Described as "straight raw fish" — minimal added ingredients, maximally lean
 - High protein, low calorie by nature of the dish
 - Quote: "You can't go wrong with that."

Egg Salad 0:50

- Rating: 5/10
 - Penalized primarily for the mayonnaise — adds significant calories beyond what the eggs alone would contribute
 - Eggs alone would rate much higher; the mayo is the main offender for anyone tracking calories
