Why I Eat Sardines for Breakfast

Channel: Brandon Carter · Published: Oct 22, 2026 · Watch: https://www.youtube.com/shorts/yNID3UOyDzk Source: full transcript

📋 Executive Summary

Brandon Carter's sardine breakfast habit is driven by radical time efficiency — no cooking, no prep, no dishes — using only canned sardines, water, and disposable utensils.

📑 Contents

- 🐟 The Sardine Breakfast Routine
- ⏱️ The Efficiency Argument

🐟 The Sardine Breakfast Routine 0:00

- Eats two cans of sardines every morning alongside a big glass of water
- Describes sardines as "delicious" — taste is a factor, but not the primary one
- Uses disposable utensils exclusively so there is nothing to wash afterward
- Simply opens the can, eats, and throws everything away when done

⏱️ The Efficiency Argument 0:22

- The core motivation is eliminating wasted time at both ends of a meal
  - No prep time required
  - No cooking required
  - No cleanup or dish-washing required

    > "Cooking's a waste of time and cleaning is a waste of time. This allows me to do neither."

- Views traditional meal preparation as a net negative on productivity
- Disposable utensils are a deliberate, consistent policy — not a one-off convenience