📋 Executive Summary

Brandon Carter outlines three "10/10 male habits" that escalate in intensity: pay all the bills yourself, stay physically active every day, and fund luxury purchases exclusively through investment profits — not earned income.

💳 Habit 1: Never Split Bills With Your Partner 0:00

- The core rule: pay all the bills yourself — do not split expenses 50/50 with your wife or girlfriend
  - His reasoning (delivered with some self-aware humor): when she contributes financially, she gains an equal say in decisions
    - Example given: you might end up having to choose pink curtains or similar things you wouldn't pick yourself, because she's paying half
  - He acknowledges the advice is provocative and notes there are elements here he wishes weren't necessary — "this is just reality"
- The underlying principle is about maintaining clear financial leadership in the household

🏃 Habit 2: Stay Active Every Single Day 0:21

- Train or move every day — no full rest days where you are completely sedentary
  - He clarifies this does NOT mean hitting the gym and lifting heavy every single day
  - On lighter days, the goal is simply to remain physically active in some form
- Concrete examples of active "rest day" activities he suggests:
  - Go for a walk with your girlfriend/partner
  - Take your kids to a trampoline park — and buy yourself a pair of grip socks to join in
    - His point: participate instead of being one of the "lazy dads" sitting on the sidelines
- The takeaway: be active on every single day of your life, even if the intensity varies

💎 Habit 3: Buy Luxuries Only From Investment Profits 0:42

- The rule: only purchase luxury/discretionary items using money generated by your assets — never directly from your earned income (salary or business revenue)
- He uses his own purchase as a live example:
  - He is wearing an RM (Richard Mille) watch — a high-end luxury timepiece
  - He did NOT buy it with money he earned from working
  - Instead, his process was:
    - Step 1 — Take earned income and invest it in stocks
    - Step 2 — Sell covered call options on those stock positions to generate premium income
    - Step 3 — Accumulate enough option premium to cover the full cost of the watch
    - Step 4 — Purchase the watch using only that options income
  - Result: "I didn't have to touch a single penny of my own money" — the principal investment remains in the market, continuing to generate returns

> The key wealth insight: your earned income goes into assets; the assets generate income; that income funds your lifestyle — your capital keeps compounding untouched.
