Context: Why 100 Days Still Matters 1:47

- The episode is recorded exactly 100 days before the end of 2026 (published Sep 22)
- Brandon frames it as the end of the third quarter — the fourth quarter is starting
- Most people gave up on their New Year's goals by Martin Luther King's birthday or Valentine's Day
- Key analogy: Tom Brady down ~30 points to the Atlanta Falcons, started his comeback at the end of the third quarter, won the Super Bowl
 - "Even if you've been losing and failing all year, if you follow these instructions, I promise you, you can make an epic comeback."
- Brandon's personal credibility:
 - Made over $20 million online
 - Built a social media following of millions

- Winning for nearly two decades
- Started losing — born on the south side of Chicago, father voluntarily left when Brandon was in his early 20s, then the 2008 recession hit; learned everything "the hard way through trial and error"

Sponsor Segments: High Ticket Trainer & Go High Level 5:01

- High Ticket Trainer — Brandon's online fitness business coaching program
 - Live training offered the next day at 7:00 PM Eastern showing how to make an extra $300–$500/day as an online trainer using AI
 - AI applications covered: editing content, generating content ideas, growing a following, getting clients, and training those clients
 - Brandon has been online training since ~2009 and claims to be one of the pioneers
 - Has taught over 15,000 people how to grow successful online fitness businesses
 - Student results showcased:

 - Uses it for: scheduling social media posts (one upload → Instagram, TikTok, YouTube Shorts), comment-triggered DM automations, all websites, all email and text outreach
 - Standard trial is 14 days; clicking Brandon's description link gets a 30-day free trial
 - "If you're serious about business, you need a CRM. Even if you're just starting, it's imperative you have a way to collect leads."

Sidebar: Thigh Repellent & Super Chats 11:39

- Brandon riffs on a joke product called "Thigh Repellent" — a spray that repels women with bad intentions
 - Pitched as a pest-control-aisle product (Lowe's / Home Depot) that smells like cologne
 - Super chats are going toward its "development" and potential Halloween release
 - Prompted by the Kavvicular news story (unnamed public figure in legal trouble)
 - "If you lay down with dogs, you get fleas. If you're always around [bad people], some of that will infiltrate your life."
- Super chat from Hang With Maris: asks about copper and the market recap
 - Greg (co-host/analyst) became SEC-certified and can no longer do market recaps on air
 - Brandon may start doing a "micro recap" himself but acknowledges he's just "a guy with a lot of money"
- Super chat from Alex: asks how to deal with bad women → answer: Thigh Repellent or "an insane Dominican girlfriend. Both work. This is a lot less volatile."

Step 1: The Four Quadrants of Life 18:28

- Brandon identifies four areas of life that goals must cover:
 - Health
 - Wealth
 - Family & Friends
 - Romantic Relationships
- Why romantic relationships get their own category (not merged with family):
 - Sexual dynamics change the relationship fundamentally
 - People get divorced all the time but typically keep the same family
 - "You're probably going to have the same mom your whole life."
- Why family and friends are merged:
 - Some people's friends are closer than family
 - You tend to stick with family regardless
- Pick one goal per quadrant — the goal that, if accomplished, would make 2026 a success and give momentum into 2027
- Example goals per quadrant:
 - Health: Lose 20 pounds
 - Wealth: Make $100K / hit $10K/month
 - Family: Take a family trip, strengthen bonds
 - Romantic: Do something meaningful for a partner, or get a girlfriend, or stop isolating yourself

Step 2: Identify the Main Goal (It's Money) 25:09

- Ask yourself: "Which one goal, if accomplished, would make all the other goals way easier or unnecessary?"

- The answer is almost always money/wealth
 - Money improves every area of life; lack of money damages every area faster than anything else
- Brandon's "oxygen" analogy:
 - Oxygen is technically the most important thing (can't live more than a few minutes without it)
 - We don't think about oxygen because it's so abundant
 - "You want to have so much money that you don't have to think about it all the time." Then you can give attention to family, health, spouse
 - The moment money runs out, it's all you can think about — just like being suffocated
- Money and health:
 - Magic Johnson example: would have died from HIV in the 80s/90s without his wealth; money gave him access to the best doctors and medicine
 - Brandon claims he has not been sick in over 11 years
 - Describes a members-only medical center on South Beach — "like a Four Seasons hotel" — available only to wealthy members
 - Access to testosterone replacement therapy and peptides years before they became mainstream
- Money and family:
 - "You don't do the best for your kids. You do the best you can afford."
 - Studies show children from wealthy families have better outcomes across all areas of life
 - "If you love your kids, the best thing you can do is make a bunch of money."
- Money and romantic relationships:
 - Studies show higher income = lower divorce rates
 - Wealthy couples can take better trips, have better experiences; one partner may not need to work unless they want to
- Conclusion: Make your financial goal the main goal. Everything else orbits it.

Step 3: Build Congruent Support Goals 32:48

- Once the main goal (money) is set, all other goals must be congruent — no conflicting directions
- Two types of support goals:
 - Offensive support goals — things that help you accomplish the main goal
 - Example: Getting in better shape → more energy, less sick, better appearance (especially important for online trainers/social media)
 - Defensive support goals — things that prevent sabotage of the main goal
 - Example: Spending more time with your girlfriend/wife so she doesn't create stress that derails you
 - Example: Spending time with kids so you don't get sad and lose motivation
- Two types of result goals (accomplished as a byproduct of hitting the main goal):
 - Altruistic result goals — things you do for others

- Example: Buying your mom a house or moving her out of a bad neighborhood
- Selfish result goals — things you want for yourself
 - Example: Moving to a city with more opportunities (or better dating options)
- Key principle: "People spread themselves too thin. They move in too many directions — that's how you go nowhere fast."
- When everything is aligned, there is no internal conflict pulling you away from the main goal

🔥 Step 4: Make Failure Impossible (Not Just "Try") 38:23

- Most people ask: "What do I need to do to accomplish this goal?" — Brandon calls this "straight-up losership"
- The right question: "What amount of effort would I have to put in to make failure impossible?"
 - This is a totally different perspective — overkill, not minimum effective dose
 - Analogy: Instead of chasing a bug with a flyswatter or Raid, call an exterminator and fumigate the whole house
 - "Extreme results require extreme actions. Nobody strolls to their goal. Batman was not balanced on the way to killing Joker."
- However, this does NOT mean destroying your health or abusing stimulants
 - Non-negotiables must remain:
 - 7–8 hours of sleep per night
 - Daily training
 - Eating correctly
 - Time with family
 - Rephrase: "How much effort would I have to put in to make failure impossible while still getting 7–8 hours of sleep, hitting my macros, spending enough time with my family?"
- After writing out what's required, ask yourself honestly: "Do I actually want this bad enough?"
 - Brandon's example: He thought he wanted to be a doctor until he saw the schooling + residency + pay — decided he didn't want it that badly and moved on without becoming a "hater"
 - It's better to change your goal honestly than to resent others or become cynical

📅 Step 5: Plan Every Hour of Every Day in Your Calendar 45:12

- Two types of tasks for every goal:
 - One-time tasks — done once (e.g., get gym membership, start LLC)
 - Recurring tasks — done repeatedly on a consistent basis (e.g., daily workouts, posting content, reaching out to leads)
- For one-time tasks:
 - Write them all out

- Assign a deadline
- Estimate how long each will take
- Time-block them in your calendar — not just when it's due, but when you will actually do it
- Example: Getting a gym membership = 1 hr to get ready + 1 hr at the gym + 1 hr commute back = 3-hour block in the calendar
- For recurring tasks:
 - Identify what must happen daily/weekly
 - Block those out in the calendar too
- "Live out of your calendar" for these 100 days — plan every hour of every day
 - Every hour should be devoted to a goal in one of the four quadrants
 - Plan: sleep time, wake time, workout, work, meals, commute, family time, recreational time
 - "We're not talking about being rigid. We're talking about being intentional."
 - Has been doing this for nearly 20 years (since Google Calendar came to smartphones)
- Side benefits of full calendar planning:
 - Vices and bad habits disappear accidentally — you simply won't schedule them
 - Brandon quit smoking weed and drinking socially "on accident" — never made a ceremony of it, just stopped putting it in the calendar
 - Pornography, video games, and other distractions fade because every hour is occupied by goal-directed activity
- Fortune 500 company analogy:
 - Brandon interned at Abbott Laboratories in their marketing and sales division during college
 - "They track everything. They know where every dollar is going. They measure, adjust, and optimize. That's why they build billion-dollar businesses."
 - "We need to start treating our lives like Fortune 500 businesses."
- Week 1 and 2 will be rough — you'll overestimate or underestimate how long tasks take; make adjustments, don't quit
 - Like a football coach who adjusts the game plan at halftime if it's not working
 - "I still get more done than almost everyone because I live out of the calendar."

Step 6: Focus on Leading Indicators, Not Lagging Ones 54:18

- Lagging indicator = the result you're trying to achieve (weight lost, money made)
- Leading indicator = the daily action that produces the result (calories consumed vs. burned, leads contacted)
- Fitness example:
 - Every pound of fat = 3,500 calories
 - If you burn 1,000 calories more than you consume every day, you will lose 10 pounds in 5 weeks with mathematical certainty

- You don't even need to look at the scale — just track the leading indicator
- Tools: MyFitnessPal (food tracking), Apple Watch or Oura Ring (calorie burn)
- Business example:
 - Revenue is the lagging indicator
 - Leads contacted per day is the leading indicator — figure out how many leads you need to contact to hit your revenue goal
- Relationship example:
 - Quality of relationship is lagging
 - Leading indicators: hours spent together, thoughtful actions taken
- Psychological benefit: Focusing only on the distant goal creates a deal with yourself that you won't be happy until you get there
 - Focusing on leading indicators lets you win today and feel good about it now
 - "All we need to do is make today a success, then the next day, and start stacking successful days."
- Everything Brandon dismisses as irrelevant noise:
 - Waking up at 3 AM, cold showers, red light therapy, no-fap, making your bed
 - "That's the equivalent of astrology for men. It's bro astrology."
 - "0% of those things get you closer to accomplishing any real goal in the real world."
 - "Everything is math."

"If you want to be rich, make more money than you spend and invest the difference. If you want to lose weight, burn more calories than you consume. If you want a better relationship with your family, spend more time with them. It's just math."

🚫 Step 7: Stop Accepting Inconsistency & Mediocre Mantras 1:06:32

- The next 100 days are what Brandon calls the "Mediocre Marathon":
 - Halloween, Thanksgiving, office parties, Christmas, vacations — people use these as excuses to slack off and say "I'll wait till next year"
 - "We are Tom Brady in the fourth quarter. It's time to make a comeback."
- Weekly review process:
 - Did you hit your input targets?
 - How consistent were you — give a percentage
 - 70% consistency is not acceptable:
 - "You don't feed your kids 70% of the time. You don't feed your pets 70% of the time. That's animal abuse."
 - "You're doing it just enough to fail. Just enough to say you tried and feel better about yourself."
 - What to do if you hit 70%: ask "What do I need to change to get to 100% next week?"

- Mediocre mantras to eliminate:
 - "Something is better than nothing"
 - "I did a little bit"
 - "I don't understand why it's not working"
- Brandon's self-accountability standard:
 - "If I don't accomplish what's on my goal list for the day, I hate myself a little bit. If you talked to a child the way I talk to myself when I miss goals, they would take that kid away from you — it would be abuse."
 - He is lenient on others but ruthless with himself
 - "The moment you stop accepting inconsistency, it will be easier to become consistent."
- Numbers-based accountability:
 - "Men lie. Women lie. Numbers don't."
 - Track everything so you know exactly why you failed or succeeded
 - When you miss, understand the specific % you missed and build a correction plan — don't cry, adjust

Step 8: The Victory Vision Planner Walkthrough (Notion + Gemini) 1:10:11

- Brandon demos a free tool called the "Victory Vision Planner" (downloadable via link in description)
- Two components:
 - Ambition Planner — for planning one-time tasks per goal
 - Success Tracker — for tracking recurring daily inputs

Ambition Planner walkthrough: - Set up four columns (one per life quadrant) and enter goals: - Example goals used: Make $10K/month, Lose 20 lbs, Buy mom a car, Get a girlfriend - Under each goal, list all the one-time tasks needed: - Wealth tasks: Start LLC, Get EIN number, Open business banking account, Develop marketing plan, Start posting content, Reach out to 100 clients - Health tasks: Get gym membership, Get personal trainer, Get diet plan, Get workout plan - Family tasks: Find out cost/down payment for mom's car, Deliver car on Christmas Eve - Romantic tasks: Lose 20 lbs first, Join Pilates class, Join salsa club, Learn game - Assign a deadline date to every task - Estimate how long each task will take (can use Notion AI to estimate and auto-populate) - Use status tracking: Not Started → In Progress → Done; filter by month and week views

Using AI (Notion + Gemini) to schedule tasks: - Once tasks have time estimates and deadlines, ask Notion AI to write a prompt for Google Gemini - Prompt instructs Gemini to act as an executive assistant, review all tasks with their time estimates and due dates, and automatically find open slots on your Google Calendar and create the events - Gemini connects natively to Google Calendar without extra tools - Works with free Gemini account (paid account also available) - Can also use Claude, ChatGPT, or Grok if they have calendar integrations - After confirming, Gemini places all tasks into the calendar — Brandon demos this live and verifies events appear correctly

Google Calendar setup for recurring tasks: - Add recurring blocks for: - Sleep — 8 hours, every day, same time - Work/Job — 9 to 5, Monday–Friday - Workout — 6:30–7 AM (or your time), daily - Commute to gym, shower, meals — block these too - Family/spouse time if applicable - Tip: Use emojis in calendar events to make it more engaging - After placing recurring blocks, use Gemini to fill the remaining open hours with one-time tasks

Success Tracker walkthrough: - Tracks daily recurring inputs — the leading indicators - Default fields (customizable): - Income earned today (lagging, but tracked for trend) - Hours slept - Hours worked on money goal - Calories consumed (auto-calculates from protein, fat, carbs inputs) - Calories burned (from Apple Watch/Oura) - Caloric surplus or deficit (auto-calculated) - Daily weight - Built-in charts that update automatically as you enter data — shows trends in income and weight over time - "If you track your calories and you see you're burning 1,000 more than you consume, with mathematical certainty you know you'll hit your goal." - Track both sheets every day → weekly review → identify trends → make adjustments

😊 Sidebar: Happiness Is Your Responsibility 57:20

- Brandon warns: don't expect accomplishing goals to make you happy
 - Not money, not kids, not a girlfriend — none of these are responsible for your emotions
 - "If something can make you happy, it can make you sad — which means you're not in control of your emotions. That is irresponsible."
- Personal example: "When I was broke and struggling and wondering how I was going to eat, there were times I would still find ways to have joy. I'm not happier now being super rich than I was asking people to swipe me on the train."
- The correct mindset: "Be happy and make money" — not "make money to become happy"
 - "Money's job is not to babysit your emotions. Money's job is to be exchanged for goods and services."
- Takeaway: Divorce your emotional state from your circumstances as much as possible; your emotions are your responsibility

📖 Q&A and Closing 1:38:31

- Super chat from Freedom Lands: "What books have you read on time management?"
 - Brandon's answer: You don't need any books. "Plan every hour of every day. That's the only thing you need to learn."
 - If you must read one: "Eat That Frog" by Brian Tracy
 - "I just told you how to manage time. You don't need to read anything."
- Brandon calls this his "most comprehensive goal achievement video yet"
