

I got fired from PRADA in 2009

Channel: Brandon Carter · Published: Aug 06, 2026 · Watch: <https://www.youtube.com/shorts/s-02W3d49n4> Source: full transcript

Executive Summary

Brandon Carter recounts getting fired from his Prada security guard job in 2009 after letting a shoplifter walk, justifying his inaction with a darkly funny cost-benefit logic: no health insurance, no fight.

Contents

-  The Prada Security Job
-  The Business Decision

The Prada Security Job 0:00

- Brandon worked as a security guard at a Prada store
 - By his own admission, he was "not really good at that job"
 - His definition of the role: he didn't guard anything or keep anyone secure
- He witnessed a shoplifter stealing and did nothing
 - His internal reaction: "Yeah, he got us, guys"
 - When colleagues flagged the theft, his response was to frame it as a team failure: "As a security unit, we got to do better"

The Business Decision 0:22

- The core rationalization: he had no health insurance at the time — "before Obamacare kicked in"
 - The stolen Prada purse was worth $5,000 — and it was insured
 - He was not insured, meaning any injury from intervening would have come out of pocket
- He framed letting the thief go as a deliberate cost-benefit calculation
 - "I had to make a decision. Lose my job or go to the hospital."
 - "I know he wants that purse more than I want to stop him."
- Closing punchline reframes the classic "it's not about the size of the dog in the fight" idiom:
 - "Sometimes it's not about the dog in the fight. It's about the fighting the dog. I ain't have much fight."
 - Implies the outcome — getting fired — was the predictable result of that logic