Executive Summary

Brandon Carter rates common "healthy" foods for getting lean, blending blunt personal taste with calorie and nutrition logic to score each food from 1 to 10.

Contents

-  Cucumbers — Rating: 1
-  Granola — Rating: 1
-  Avocado — Rating: 6
-  Berries — Rating: 10
-  Eggs — Rating: 9
-  Trail Mix — Rating: 1
-  Greek Yogurt — Rating: 8

Cucumbers — Rating: 1 0:00

- Score: 1/10
- Reasoning is entirely taste-based — Brandon says he hates them "with all my heart"
 - Dismisses any potential health benefits outright: "I don't care how healthy they are. I don't care what potential benefits they have. They're gross."
 - Notes his gym building infuses water with cucumbers, which he finds awful

Granola — Rating: 1 0:23

- Score: 1/10
- Two main criticisms:
 - Appearance: "looks like herbal food... like something you would feed a small critter or rodent"
 - Nutrition: typically very high in calories and added sugar
- Verdict: clearly avoid if you're trying to cut/get lean

Avocado — Rating: 6 0:23

- Score: 6/10
- Not rated low because it's unhealthy — Brandon acknowledges it is healthy
- Penalized for being calorically dense
 - When the goal is getting lean, getting ripped, or achieving a six-pack, lower-calorie foods are preferred
 - Caloric density alone is the reason it doesn't score higher

Berries — Rating: 10 0:44

- Score: 10/10 — the top-rated food in the video
- Brandon eats berries "pretty much every day" despite following a strict keto diet for 11 years straight
 - Key reason: berries are low on the glycemic index, allowing them to fit within ketosis
- Two core benefits for anyone trying to get lean:
 - Low in calories
 - Low on the glycemic index
- Universally recommended — "you ain't keto" doesn't matter, the benefits apply regardless of diet

Eggs — Rating: 9 0:44

- Score: 9/10
- Described as "super healthy"
- Nutritional highlights:
 - High in quality protein
 - High in healthy fat
- No significant caveats mentioned

Trail Mix — Rating: 1 0:67

- Score: 1/10
- Key issue: marketed as healthy but contains candy mixed in
 - "They have candies in it and they'll call it healthy"
- Verdict: "Unless you a small child, stay away from that"

Greek Yogurt — Rating: 8 0:67

- Score: 8/10
- Major positive: very high in protein
- Important caveat: must choose plain/unsweetened varieties
 - Many brands add large amounts of sugar — avoid those

- Taste note: Brandon compares the texture/taste to "eating a spoonful of toothpaste" — calls it an acquired taste
 - His take: "You'll learn to like it"
