

You Have 18 Months Left To Get Rich

Channel: Onem · Published: Jul 03, 2026 · Watch: <https://www.youtube.com/shorts/PRT28chl2Mg> Source: full transcript

Executive Summary

Online gurus repeatedly manufacture fake urgency — claiming you have "18 months left" to make money — to pressure quick purchases. This is a recycled fear tactic, not a genuine warning. Opportunities always exist; don't FOMO into bad decisions.

Contents

-  The Recurring "Last Chance" Scam Pattern
-  Why They Use Urgency: The Psychology Behind the Tactic
-  The FOMO Trap and Its Consequences
-  Pattern Recognition: How Experience Exposes the Game
-  Opportunities Never Actually Disappear
-  The AI Hype Specifically — A Cautionary Note

The Recurring "Last Chance" Scam Pattern 0:00

- The video opens as a "daily reminder to ignore all the bollocks that's online"
- The "running out of time" narrative has been used repeatedly across different tech waves:
 - Tai Lopez era — "You've got maybe 12 months before you'll never be able to make money again"
 - Social media marketing boom — same warnings recycled
 - The internet era — "no jobs left, nobody's going to make any money"
 - AI — the current version of the same script
- The same individual gurus often repeat the warning multiple times:
 - Some have said it "three times this year alone"
 - The same person may be on their "28th product" they've tried to sell you
 - Each new product launch re-triggers the same urgency message

Why They Use Urgency: The Psychology Behind the Tactic 0:46

- The sole reason for the "18 months left" framing is to create urgency
 - Urgency shortens the buyer's decision-making window
 - The faster you buy, the more money they make in the short term
- It exploits the natural human fear of missing out

- You're left asking: "Should I buy this course? Is this really my last opportunity?"
- The moment you part with your money under that fear, they win
 - "They never refund you ever again" — the transaction is final and the manipulation complete
- The entire online guru system is described as revolving around selling fear

The FOMO Trap and Its Consequences 1:09

- Giving in to FOMO leads to short-term, emotionally driven decisions
 - "Everything goes wrong" after a panic buy
- The cycle then resets: a year later the same guru catches you again with the same message
 - "This is your last opportunity. Nobody's going to make money beyond this point."
- The pattern keeps repeating indefinitely, extracting money at each cycle
- Key warning: be "extremely careful" — recognise the loop before it repeats on you

Pattern Recognition: How Experience Exposes the Game 1:31

- With age and experience comes the ability to spot the pattern
 - "Everything in life is just pattern recognition"
- Once you've lived through multiple hype cycles, the script becomes obvious:
 - "Didn't that other guru say that before?"
 - "Didn't that same guy say it three times this year alone?"
- The realisation: "Everyone's just trying to create urgency. They're just trying to sell you on fear."
- Younger or newer audiences are the most vulnerable because they lack this accumulated pattern recognition

Opportunities Never Actually Disappear 1:54

- Core reassurance: "Money will always be made. Opportunities will always be around."
- Historical evidence from the internet revolution:
 - People said the internet would eliminate all jobs
 - Parents had to learn PowerPoint, Word, Excel — treated as existential threat
 - Yet: builders still work, high street stores are still open, painters and manual labourers still earn money
- Technology shifts the landscape but does not erase opportunity
 - There is "always something you can do, something you can change to"

The AI Hype Specifically — A Cautionary Note 2:39

- AI is acknowledged as potentially great in the future — but the presenter is honest about current reality

- Real-world experience from people he knows personally:
 - Many spent significant money believing AI was ready to replace human work now
 - Outcome: "a human was actually better — we found out we actually got worse results"
- The AI urgency narrative is being weaponised the same way every previous tech wave was
- Bottom line advice: "Don't FOMO in. Don't panic. They just want your cash so they can pretend to be richer than [you]."

The clearest signal that something is a sales tactic rather than genuine advice: if the same person has warned you it's your "last chance" seven times across 28 different products, the urgency is the product.