- 5 Things I've Learned After 27 Years of Working Out (00:14:10)

Framed as hard-won lessons, not beginner theory

- Lesson 1 — Track Your Macros and Calories From the Beginning (00:15:47)

- Emphasis on starting tracking early rather than going by feel
- Extended segment (~9 min) suggesting detailed discussion of macro splits, calorie targets, or common tracking mistakes
- Sub-segment: How to track food and health data using AI (00:24:35)
- Tools mentioned: Claude and ChatGPT
- Likely covers logging meals via AI prompts, estimating portions, interpreting data
- Runs ~9 min — suggests a practical walkthrough

Recap of all five fitness changes (01:07:57)

- Brief review before diving into lessons 2–5

Lesson 2 — Full Body Workouts & Compound Movements Are Superior (01:10:00)

- Advocates full-body programming over isolated body-part splits
- Compound movements (squats, deadlifts, presses, rows) emphasized
- ~9-min segment suggests reasoning around hormonal response, frequency, and efficiency

Lesson 3 — Focus on NEAT Over Hard Cardio (01:19:20)

- NEAT = Non-Exercise Activity Thermogenesis (walking, standing, daily movement)
- Positioned as more sustainable and effective than structured cardio sessions
- ~15-min segment — likely includes practical ways to increase daily NEAT

Lesson 4 — Split Your Workouts: The Two First Halves Rule (01:34:57)

- Concept: treat each half of a session as its own "first half" to maintain intensity
- May refer to splitting a longer session into two shorter sessions or managing energy within one session
- ~7-min segment

Lesson 5 — Track Daily Calorie Burn with Wearables (01:42:13)

- Devices mentioned: Oura Ring and Apple Watch
- Using wearable data to understand true daily energy expenditure
- Bridges the macro-tracking lesson with real-time output measurement
- ~8-min segment

Q&A — Overcoming Complacency & Raising Personal Standards (01:49:58)

- Closes the episode with mindset/psychology content
- Topics: breaking out of complacency, setting and holding higher personal standards

The throughline of the episode: tracking — whether calories, movement, or market data — is the foundational habit separating men who stay average from those who become both rich and jacked.
