📋 Executive Summary

Brandon Carter argues that October through December — three months most people waste waiting for New Year's — is all the time needed to become a noticeably different man through four consistent daily actions.

🗓️ The 3-Month Window

- Most people delay self-improvement until January 1st and a new gym membership
  - That waiting mindset means losing October, November, and December — a full quarter of the year
- The core argument: you don't need a new year, you need the next 3 months
  - The calendar period is October → November → December

💪 The Four Commitments

- Train 4 to 5 days a week — regardless of how you feel
  - Consistency over motivation; showing up on bad days is the point
- Protein at every meal, no sugar, no alcohol
  - Diet is kept simple: anchor every meal around protein, eliminate the two biggest dietary saboteurs
- Walk after you eat
  - A simple, repeatable habit that aids digestion and adds daily low-intensity movement
- 1 hour a day on the thing that gets you out of the 9-5
  - Dedicated daily time on a side income or skill that builds financial independence

🏁 The Payoff

- Do all four actions for 3 months straight and you enter January already transformed
  - You become the version of yourself others are only just resolving to become

- The competitive advantage is simply starting now while everyone else is still waiting
