7/10 Man With 8/10 Assets

📋 Executive Summary

Society's obsession with rankings and being number one is engineered to keep people unhappy. A balanced "straight seven" personal standard combined with "straight eight" assets delivers peak life — all the real benefits with almost none of the downsides.

🏆 The Cult of Winning and Why It's Destructive 0:00

- From childhood, people are conditioned to be first — best grades, fastest athlete, top of the class
  - "If you ain't first, you're last" — Talladega Nights quote used as a cultural shorthand for this mindset
  - The movie later contradicts itself: the dad admits he was "high" when he said it and that it "doesn't make any sense at all"
- Award shows, charts, and rankings (Oscars, Brits, Kids' Choice Awards, Billboard charts, revenue league tables) are cited as reinforcements of this mindset
  - The host explicitly does not care who the highest-grossing actor, athlete, or real estate firm is
- The school classroom is the original training ground: 30–60 kids, one winner in each category
  - One beautiful girl in the class → only one person "gets" her → creates a false scarcity worldview
- This comparison culture is framed as deliberately engineered to make people want more, feel inadequate, and never be satisfied
  - "Comparison is the thief of joy"
  - The more you want something, the less you get — wanting creates a cycle of chasing and misery

📊 The Numbers That Prove You Don't Have to Be #1 1:50

- Two questions were posed to Claude (AI) to illustrate the point:
  - Question 1: How many women in the world are models?
    - Definition used: any woman who has ever done even one modelling shoot
    - Claude's estimate: ~30 million women globally
    - Starting pool noted as ~1 billion adult women in urban, middle-income-or-better settings — meaning the real number could be even higher
  - Question 2: How rich is the 900,000th richest person in the world?
    - Estimated net worth: ~$20 million
- The combined implication: if someone offered you the status of the 900,000th richest man on earth paired with the 30 millionth most beautiful woman in the world, you would be a deca-millionaire with a model — and nobody would know who you are
  - This dismantles the "only number one counts" framework entirely
- In business specifically, you can be the 900th winner — 899,999 people outrank you — and still be worth $20 million
  - This is almost never discussed publicly because the ranking/comparison culture drowns it out

⚖️ The "More You Want It" Law of Pushback 2:13

- A recurring pattern is observed: the more intensely someone wants something, the more life pushes back against it
  - Referenced as "reality transurfing" or connected to Aldous Huxley's idea that pushing for something makes it push back
- Examples given:
  - Floyd Mayweather — obsessed with money, called himself "Money Mayweather," said boxing didn't matter; result: considered the greatest boxer of all time, but now reportedly broke with tax problems
  - Muhammad Ali — greatest talker of all time; lost his voice to Parkinson's disease
  - Ronnie Coleman — arguably the most successful bodybuilder ever; can no longer walk due to back injuries
  - Michael Schumacher — peak physical condition as an F1 driver; ended up in a coma from a skiing accident
  - Kevin Hart — dreamed of hosting the Oscars; came within reach and lost the opportunity due to past comments resurfacing
  - Andrew Tate — finally got fame, pushed it too far and "dropped off a cliff"
  - The guy most worried about his hair at school loses his hair the quickest
  - The woman most obsessed with beauty ends up looking worse
- The antidote: "once you stop giving a f, things kind of fall into place"
- Historical empires follow the same pattern — they reach a size, try to grow further, and collapse
  - Referenced via the film Limitless: at some point, you grab a coffee, sit on the beach, and stop

🧮 The Straight Seven System Explained 7:08

- The Straight Seven System is a framework the host created to explain why a man who scores 7 across all life areas outperforms a man who scores 10 in some and 2 in others
- Categories measured: fitness, looks, money/assets, clothes, etc.
- Why 7 is the "magic area":
  - Reaching a 10 in any single area requires so much effort that other areas collapse
    - A man who is a 10 in money is probably a terrible father
    - A man who is a great father and always present is probably broke or out of shape
  - A 7 across the board is manageable and diverse — adaptability is the key to survival
  - "A guy who's a seven overall makes a man a 10" — diversity and balance are rare and highly attractive
- Comparison: the obese billionaire
  - Money/assets: 10, Clothes: technically 10 but look bad because of physique → downgraded to ~4, Looks/fitness: 1
  - Overall score: 5.4 — he loses to the well-rounded 7
  - People use him; he's not taken seriously despite his wealth
- The scale breakdown for personal development:
  - 1 (bottom): No effort, no personal care — "giving up on life"; no results
  - 7 (middle): Healthy, pre-obsession, clear of laziness — accomplishable with great results
  - 10 (top): Ego-driven, narcissistic, desire to be accepted by others — the universe pushes back; problems multiply
- A 7 is "easily accomplishable with crazy good results" — the sweet spot before obsession kicks in
- Men the host knows who are in great physical shape tend to be relaxed about diet — "they eat a few desserts now and then... I'll have a tiramisu and a wine. Doesn't matter. Those guys are pretty shredded."
- Going above 7 naturally over time is fine — but only if it happened through consistency and a bit of luck, not obsession
  - Example: Theo James — put his head down, got in shape, took on better roles gradually, rose without doing anything "dodgy"

🛒 Straight Eight Assets: The Sweet Spot for Buying Things 9:17

- The same scale applies to assets (things you own), but the ideal target shifts to 8 rather than 7
- Why 8 for assets (not 7):
  - 7 and below: things are average to decent — not enough real-world life benefit
  - 8: maximum bang for the buck — all the benefits with almost none of the negative side effects
  - 9–10: stress, security risks, maintenance nightmares, being a target
- Key principle for an 8-rated asset:
  - "Beneficial to your purpose, intentional purchases with real-world usage"

- "All of the benefits versus almost none of the downside with no desire to impress others"

- Buying cheap (1–3): buy cheap, buy twice; no self-respect; life becomes harder
- The scale for assets:

Level	Description
1–3	Trash/cheap — causes problems, no life benefit
4–5	Below average — things are still rough
6	Average — things are okay
7	Getting better — good, decent life
8	Peak value — great life, nearly all benefits, minimal negatives
9–10	Too much stress, security risk, beacon to criminals and jealousy

- Referenced Brad Pitt in Fight Club: "The things you own end up owning you"
  - A yacht at 10/10 means staff, tax, parking fees (e.g. Monaco: a million to park), constant maintenance — "this fing yacht owns me"

🚨 The Problems With 9/10 and 10/10 Assets 13:23

- Jack Grealish's manor house (10/10 house):
  - Got robbed while he was playing football, family was inside — "really shook him up"
  - A beacon to criminals; charities and others also target you
  - Maintenance spiral: cleaners → gardener → security → security cameras → dogs → dog-sitter → chef → endless repairs (broken pipes, new windows, conservatory, doors) → can't go on holiday
- Floyd Mayweather's multimillion-pound watch (10/10 watch):
  - Only relevant in Abu Dhabi, Dubai, Saudi Arabia — "maybe one or two events"
  - Requires armed security at all times
  - "Doesn't even look that good"
- Blake Lively's $2.5 million wedding ring:
  - Makes her a constant security target everywhere she travels
  - Online praise for the husband, but massive practical cost and risk
- Louis Vuitton red-bottomed shoes (~£1,000–£2,000):
  - Signals wealth to everyone; attracts gold diggers, potential criminals
  - Can lead to being followed home
- Chris Eubank Jr.'s personalised number plate:
  - Host saw him in London, noted it was "stupid"; Eubank was robbed ~2 weeks later
  - Anyone can follow him home and know exactly who lives there

- Supercar (e.g. Pagani Zonda, Lamborghini Huracan):
  - Gets coffee thrown on it, people jump on it, jealous vandalism
  - Host's former neighbour Ash White (owner of Hera) had a Lamborghini Urus — people constantly wanted to key it; the orange Huracan got keyed multiple times, wing mirrors kicked off
  - Practically useless: can't take friends (only one passenger), can't do food shopping, can't do an 8-hour road trip comfortably, worried it'll break down
  - One broken mirror: ~£12,000 to fix
- Mega-yacht:
  - Target for major criminal organisations
  - Impossible to hide — press drones circle (host personally experienced this at Cannes)
  - Fees, staff, taxes, charges in every port
- A 10/10 woman (e.g. Adriana Lima — Victoria's Secret model, Brazilian):
  - Gets DMed by Drake, LeBron James, Chris Hemsworth — constant competition
  - Billionaires and sheikhs offer her money to be their wife
  - Stalkers — potentially 70 million obsessive followers
  - Gets invited to exclusive parties with billionaires constantly
  - Thinks she's irreplaceable → ego problems: "Shakira loses her mind" when Piqué leaves for someone else, because she'd always believed no one was better
  - She's on easy mode — has never been rejected properly, never had to develop resilience
- The 10/10 benefits ARE real: the sex, the status, the attention, the business deals — "your life is brilliant" — but all the negatives come with it, and that's the trade-off

✅ What Straight Seven + Straight Eight Actually Looks Like in Practice 19:37

- House: Michael B. Jordan's old black/grey cladding house — manageable, similar size to host's own, could be cleaned yourself if needed, pool you can net yourself, 5–10 people chilling, fire table outdoor cooking setup
- Car: Porsche Cayenne (all black) or Mercedes CLE (convertible)
  - People think: "He's doing well for himself. Fair play."
  - Can take your mum, drive 8 hours to Barcelona for El Clásico (VIP seats), stop in Valencia, fit 5 people with leg room, put luggage in the back
  - Nobody keys it, nobody tries to rob you
  - "You could be a dad in his 40s with a finance job, a Russian mafia boss, or a Premier League footballer" — deliberate ambiguity is protective
- Watch: ~£9,000–£10,000 black-dialled watch (host's is a Bright Link)
  - People notice it in elevators, women glance at it, watch enthusiasts start conversations
  - At 6'2" and well-built: nobody's going to prison over a £10K watch
  - "You get all the same benefits without any of the negatives"

    - Suggested ceiling: £15,000–£20,000; nothing more expensive needed
- Shoes: Scarosso shoes, ~$400 — stylish, no red bottoms, nobody clocks you as a target
- Boat: Small speedboat, ~£80,000–£100,000, get a boating licence
    - "I had more fun on the speedboats in Budva than I did on the yacht in Crete"
    - Can pull up to restaurants, steam around a lake, girl sits on the back having the time of her life
    - Suggested lifestyle base: Montenegro (tier 3 city, on the water, cheap and beautiful)
- Studio apartment: Called one of the best life hacks in the world for a single man or a man without kids
    - "You're literally paying for a wall" with a one-bedroom — save £200,000–£300,000
- Other life-quality assets mentioned: pool heater, outdoor cooking setup (not just a barbecue), fire table, jet ski, quad bike (in warm climates), sauna, cinema room with big sound system
- 8/10 woman:
    - Undeniably beautiful — "anything seven or above is ridiculously beautiful and everybody wants them"
    - Not world-famous; not getting DMed by NBA/NFL players daily
    - Has been rejected before — understands the world, is humble, has worked 9-to-5 jobs
    - Nobody's buying her villas or giving her £50K/month — her baseline expectations are realistic
    - "My dick's ready to go. What are you talking about?" — the sexual/attraction benefit of a 10 vs an 8 is marginal; the stress difference is enormous
    - When you walk down the street: people think "damn, she's hot" — that's all you want. Anything more becomes obsession-inducing for others
- The 80/20 principle in practice:
    - Friend "Stevie" (37–38 years old, "done it all"): "You get around about 80% of the same results for 20% of the cost"
    - Mercedes CLE convertible vs Lamborghini Huracán: roof down, sun, laughs, pulled up at the beach, filled the boot — "Was it a hassle? Not one bit"
    - The final 20% of luxury comes with major problems and major issues

🧘 Letting Go and Living the 7/10 Life 28:18

- The host's personal application of the framework:
    - Currently worth enough to be comfortable, income is automated, systems in place
    - Now has bandwidth to pursue 10% body fat for the first time (currently ~14%) — doing it because he can and wants to, not out of obsession
    - Getting a new all-black BMW X1 (2026 plate) — "manageable, won't cost me a lot, ticks every box"
    - Pool at 30°C, hot tub incoming, fire table, cinema with big sound system built behind him
    - "This is it. This is great. Just more of this."
- Being lowkey is a feature, not a bug:
    - People often tell him "I didn't know you made that much" — he considers this a compliment
    - "I just want to keep it lowkey, build my assets up, be a seven out of 10 with eight out of 10 assets"

- Andrew Tate case study as a cautionary tale:
  - Peak life moment: Romania, sitting with a coffee in a big coat, a little fame, cars and lifestyle but no massive spotlight — "their life was sick"
  - Pushed for more fame → legal problems, house arrest, international charges
  - "You got to learn from that"
- Justin Bieber cited as another example: money 10, model access 10, fame 10 — "super miserable" because the 10-level problems are overwhelming
- Tom Holland mentioned as another potentially miserable famous person
- Conor McGregor: reached the top → cocaine addiction, rape charge — "if you fly too close to the sun, your wings burn" (Icarus reference)
- The universal law restated:
  - "Every girl I've ever known — the less I want them, the more they want me"
  - "When you think about it like that, it tends to go up. You're not pushing."
  - Business: "If nobody joins, is it an issue? Not really. I can only keep making the product better."

> "You should be a seven out of 10 man with eight out of 10 assets who has a ten out of ten life."

- Final summary of the philosophy:
  - Straight 7 for yourself: requires effort but not obsession; healthy, balanced, diverse, achievable
  - Straight 8 for assets: intentional purchases that genuinely improve life; manageable; no security detail needed
  - If it naturally rises above that over time due to consistency and patience — great; but that's the outcome, not the goal
  - "You don't have to win to win"
