Executive Summary

A short comedic bit that uses caffeine intake tiers as a satirical proxy for hustle level, ambition, and personality — escalating from lazy napper to deranged, color-hearing billionaire.

Contents

- ☕ Tier 1: 0–100mg
- 😴 Tier 2: 100–200mg
- 💪 Tier 3: 200–400mg
- ⚡ Tier 4: 500mg
- 🌈 Tier 5: 800mg and Up
- 💰 Tier 6: 1,000mg and Up

Tier 1: 0–100mg 0:00

- You probably take naps after work
- You have a Pinterest board
- On your birthday, you ride around with your "besties" wearing a tiara
 - Implication: low energy, low ambition, comfort-seeking lifestyle

Tier 2: 100–200mg 0:00

- You're awake, but barely
- You probably have a side hustle you hope will take off
 - The goal: quit the job you hate and escape the boss you're scared of
 - Implication: aspirational but not yet fully committed or executing at high output

Tier 3: 200–400mg 0:00

- "This is where life kind of begins"
- You get way more done than the average person
 - But that comparison means nothing to you — you don't measure yourself against average
 - Implication: high performer with an internal, non-comparative drive

Tier 4: 500mg 0:23

- You no longer count caffeine in milligrams — you count it in energy drinks
- Your recycling bin looks like a frat house
- You've taken sales calls while at the urinal — and closed them
 - Implication: relentless, always-on grinder with zero downtime

Tier 5: 800mg and Up 0:47

- You can literally "hear colors"
- Your Oura Ring or Whoop thinks you're working out constantly, even when you're sitting still
 - Heart rate so elevated that wearables misread resting state as exercise
- Your Apple Watch asks if you're okay
 - Your reply: "I'm better than okay. I just bought this building."
 - Implication: operating at a physiologically alarming but financially ascending level

Tier 6: 1,000mg and Up 0:47

- "This is where you start balling out of control"
- You're never tired — because "tired is a choice that poor people make"
- Your heart rate is higher than your competitor's revenue
 - Implication: peak satirical hustler — completely unhinged, astronomically successful, and medically questionable
