

Did You Know You Can't Keep the Clothes When You Model? #shorts

Channel: Brandon Carter · Published: Jul 07, 2026 · Watch: https://www.youtube.com/shorts/uGnBJzX_zX8 Source: full transcript

Executive Summary

Brandon Carter reveals a little-known modeling industry rule — models must return all clothes after a shoot — and recounts a cliffhanger story about requesting to keep a custom-tailored Sean John suit, with Diddy's response cut off.

Contents

-  The Rule: Models Don't Keep the Clothes
-  The Sean John Suit Story

The Rule: Models Don't Keep the Clothes 0:00

- The standard modeling industry practice is that you must return all garments after the job — no matter what.
 - Brandon states this happens "almost every time you model."
 - Even intimate garments are not exempt — he had to return underwear after modeling it.
 - His reaction: "This is weird. Y'all should let me keep it. But no, they wanted that underwear back."

The Sean John Suit Story 0:09

- Brandon did a modeling job for Sean John where Diddy was present at the event.
- The brand put him in a Sean John suit that was custom-tailored specifically to his measurements for the event.
 - Because it was tailored to fit him "like a glove," he reasoned there was no practical use for the suit after the event — it was made for his body.
- He asked his agent at the event whether he could keep the suit.
 - His agent approached Diddy directly, in front of Brandon, to ask.
 - Diddy did not respond to the agent — instead he looked directly at Brandon and said... (transcript cuts off — Diddy's response is not included in the clip).