I Was The Worst Security Guard In Prada History

Channel: Brandon Carter · Published: Oct 22, 2026 · Watch: https://www.youtube.com/shorts/Ph5L3IVoqWk Source: full transcript

📋 Executive Summary

Brandon Carter admits he was fired — not quit — from his Prada security guard job, having deliberately ignored shoplifters because he lacked health insurance and refused to risk a costly ER visit over insured goods.

📑 Contents

- 🔐 Getting Fired from Prada
- 🏥 The No-Insurance Calculation
- 🚪 The Door-Holding Incident
- 😂 The Fake Team Huddle

🔐 Getting Fired from Prada 0:00

- Brandon clarifies he did NOT quit his job at Prada — they let him go
  - He acknowledges it was "a good decision on their part"
- Describes himself as "one of the worst security guards of all time"
  - "I ain't guarding nobody and I ain't keep nobody secure"
- Watched people steal items multiple times and chose not to intervene

🏥 The No-Insurance Calculation 0:00

- This took place before the Affordable Care Act (Obamacare), so he had no health insurance
- His internal logic: the stolen purse is insured; the Prada company will be fine
  - "Johnny Prada or whoever owns this — they going to be all right"
  - "If I got to go to the emergency room, it's a financial disaster"
- Decided a potential injury from stopping a thief was not worth the personal financial risk

🚪 The Door-Holding Incident 0:22

- He actually opened the door for someone who was in the process of stealing merchandise
  - Told the thief "have a nice day" while pretending not to notice
- The head of security came down immediately after and confronted him

- "Yo, man, he just stole a purse"

😂 The Fake Team Huddle 0:44

- Rather than admit he saw the theft, Brandon feigned shock and rallied the security team
  - "Damn, yo, he got us. They got us, guys."
  - "We got to do better as a security unit. We got to step our games up."
- Closes by conceding Prada made the right call firing him
  - Notes Prada is a billion-dollar company, implying they had more at stake than he did