Executive Summary

Brandon Carter delivers a blunt five-part truth: every desirable outcome has a non-negotiable cost, and most people quit when they discover what that cost actually is.

Contents

-  Cost of Money: Risk
-  Cost of Power: Being Disliked
-  Cost of a Growing Following: Handling Haters
-  Cost of Momentum: Moving Fast
-  Cost of Results: No Excuses

Cost of Money: Risk 0:00

- Wanting money is common; accepting the price is not
 - The non-negotiable cost is taking risks
 - No risk tolerance = no financial upside

Cost of Power: Being Disliked 0:05

- Power requires making decisions and taking positions that not everyone will approve of
 - You must be okay being disliked — comfort-seeking and real power are incompatible

Cost of a Growing Following: Handling Haters 0:08

- Audience growth brings increased visibility — and with it, criticism and hostility
 - Dealing with haters is not optional; it is a direct byproduct of reach

Cost of Momentum: Moving Fast 0:12

- Motion (momentum) does not come from waiting or over-planning
 - The cost is starting fast — before you feel fully ready

⊘ Cost of Results: No Excuses 0:16

- Results require full accountability
 - Stop making excuses — excuses are the direct trade-off you give up in exchange for real outcomes

The core insight: everybody wants the outcome until they find out what it costs.
