Context & Setup 0:00

- Greg Lavecchia introduces himself as CEO and co-founder of Bloom, which he founded in 2019 with his wife Mary Lavecchia
  - The company is in its 7th year
- He's filming on World Cup Final night in New York City (~9:30 PM), having just left a bar after tequila drinks, smoking a cigar
- Three days prior he spoke at a coaching session in Manhattan with 500 entrepreneurs
  - Most were under 30 years old
  - Revenue range: $10 million to $250 million annually
  - All were running business models that didn't exist 4 years ago
- His core thesis: ~80% of what he learned in school is now completely outdated for today's arena

- The previous generation gave us a GPS route to a destination that no longer exists
- He doesn't call these "lies" because the previous generation didn't know they were misleading — they simply didn't know the landscape would change
- Filming location provides backdrop of the Statue of Liberty, Brooklyn Bridge, and Ellis Island

Lie 1: Stay Loyal to One Career for 30 Years 1:50

- The old script: get good grades → excel in college → get a job → keep it for 30 years → buy a house → start a family → climb the corporate ladder through loyalty
- Greg's counter-view as a CEO of a multi-billion dollar valued company:
  - A resume showing only one job in the last 10 years is a yellow-to-red warning flag
  - Someone with experience at only one place can only offer one lens — that's a red flag at Bloom
- What he actually looks for:
  - Experience at three or more different places
  - Someone who has tried multiple things and can bring diverse, cross-pollinated experience to the table

Lie 2: Your Twenties Are for Settling Down 2:55

- The old belief: buy a house, have kids, start a family — all in your twenties
- Greg's argument: you are not required to do this if you don't want to
  - You can instead invest your twenties in becoming the best version of yourself
- Why the old model was wrong:
  - Previous generations believed life was essentially over at 50 — time to retire, sit in a rocking chair, collect savings
  - Reality today: every high-performing person Greg knows is excelling in their 60s, 70s, and even 80s
- Supporting evidence:
  - He went on a hike in Aspen, Colorado at 9,000 feet elevation two weeks prior with a 65-year-old who outpaced him completely
  - Modern medicine and knowledge have tripled the productive lifespan compared to 40 years ago
- Conclusion: You can invest your twenties and reap rewards across your 30s, 40s, 50s, 60s, 70s, and 80s — this is now a viable and accepted path

Lie 3: Your Circumstances Are Your Identity 4:24

- The old message: your background (wealth, education, connections) determines your ceiling — told to people ostensibly to protect them from risk
- Greg's observation: there are now more controllable variables than ever for anyone entering today's arena

- Skills and values a person can offer in the modern marketplace have less to do with their starting circumstances than ever before
- On the myth of privileged advantage:
  - Going to Harvard teaches you nothing about succeeding on a TikTok Shop
  - Having wealthy parents and elite networks to climb the corporate ladder is irrelevant — because nobody watching this wants to climb the corporate ladder anyway
  - In 9 out of 10 cases, people who grew up with abundant resources are weak and cowardly when they actually enter the real competitive arena
- His counter-intuitive claim: if you didn't grow up with a silver spoon, you actually have the advantage
  - Those with privileged upbringings often end up in suits, tied to a desk, excited about a chlorinated pool in their backyard
  - "Money without freedom is still just worthless paper"
- The old belief was relevant only when the corporate ladder mattered — it doesn't anymore

Lie 4: The Suit-Wearing Consultant Has Authority 6:33

- The trap of false authority: hiring formal executives and consultants in suits to advise businesses
- Greg's 12-year experience as an entrepreneur:
  - Every time he or competitors hired these executives, they were useless
  - All they do is read data and charge $350,000/year while working 80 hours a week being told what to do
- His redefinition of high-status individuals in today's society:
  - NOT the suit-wearing executive
  - YES: entrepreneurs and intrapreneurs who do what they love every day and are genuinely committed to the mission
- How Bloom operates:
  - He doesn't care if an employee has a doctor's appointment in the morning or needs to drop kids off somewhere
  - He trusts them because they're entrepreneurially minded and committed to Bloom's mission of spreading wellness and delivering the best products
- Joining a massive corporation as 1 of 20,000 employees is no longer a high-status move

Lie 5: The Wealthy Lifestyle on Instagram Is Real 7:37

- The trap of fake wealth: social media portrayals of Lamborghinis, white picket fences, perfect families
- His estimate: 9 out of 10 people showing this lifestyle are deceiving you
  - The Lamborghini is a few years old and they put all their money into the down payment
  - They can barely afford the rent
  - Their family isn't actually as happy as shown

- The house was rented or barely affordable, acquired purely for the Instagram post
- People traveling everywhere are often risking everything just to show a trip to Mykonos, Greece
- Specific dangers he calls out:
  - Polymarket and sports betting culture
  - "Nilk Boys" group and Drake being involved in promoting gambling wins
  - People selling day-trading courses — nobody who actually makes serious money day-trading needs to sell you a course on how to do it
- The doom loop he warns against:
  - You lose money on a Polymarket World Cup bet → feel desperate → buy a get-rich-quick course from someone with a rented Lamborghini → lose more money
- His prescription: "Bet on yourself."
  - In business, you only need a 3-out-of-10 success rate on your bets to end up in the hall of fame — like baseball
  - The people building companies you admire (e.g., those competing with Red Bull and Monster) are not wasting time on Polymarket

"No one is day-trading stocks and making so much money that they decided to sell you a course on how to do it too. No one."

Lie 6: Your Friends Are Neutral 10:34

- The assumption: your existing friends are simply part of your life and don't affect your trajectory
- The reality: friends are never neutral — they are either pushing you forward or pulling you back
  - People pulling you back are poison to your goals
- What to do:
  - Audit your friend group honestly
  - Leave some people behind — you can see them occasionally for a drink, but you cannot keep them as central figures
  - If they don't support you, you cannot stay around them
- The goal is becoming the best version of yourself within a decade — this requires surrounding yourself with people aligned with that direction

Lie 7: Your Hometown Is Your Comfort Zone 11:18

- The reframe: your hometown isn't comfortable — it's just familiar
- Three reasons to leave:
  - The previous generation pressuring you to stay
  - Old friends pulling you back into complacency

- The simple need for new inspiration from new people
- His recommended cities to move to right now, ranked by entrepreneurial environment:

| City                 | Notes                                                                          |
|----------------------|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| Austin, Texas | Fewest distractions; best entrepreneurial hub; Greg lives here 70% of the year |
| New York City        | Enormous inspiration; more distractions                                        |
| Miami                | High energy; distractions present                                              |
| Los Angeles          | Strong hub; distractions present                                               |

- Personal data point: Greg and his wife moved five times in 6 years, testing every major entrepreneurial hub in the country
  - Austin stood out as the clear winner
- Moving to any of those four cities will provide boundless inspiration

Lie 8: Being Generous First Is Always Virtuous 12:22

- Credit given to Andy Frisella — serial entrepreneur and podcast host who sent Greg motivational messages over the past two years
- The old teaching: generosity is the highest virtue; always give to others first
- Greg's nuanced counter:
  - Wanting to be generous and have a good heart is admirable — but it needs to be sequenced correctly
  - You must accumulate resources first — energy, capital, knowledge — before you can give at scale
- The compounding generosity argument:
  - A person with no resources can only give a small amount
  - A person who has built real wealth, real development, real wisdom, and a real network can help the community beyond what you can currently imagine
- Practical instruction:
  - Dedicate time to yourself and your goals first
  - Once those goals accumulate and are achieved, you become the most giving version of yourself
  - "I promise you that."

Lie 9: Comfort and Rest Are the Goal 13:29

- The old promise sold to the previous generation: desk job + 4 weeks annual vacation + cruise holidays + Christmas week off with cold cuts
- Greg's position: he has zero interest in any of that
  - Comfort is an illusion, not a destination
  - You don't want to be comfortable in your 20s and 30s

- What the alternative looks like:
  - You will be under pressure and stressed — that is the point
  - Living a striving life in your 20s and 30s is far more satisfying and enjoyable than living a boring one
- His critique of the previous generation:
  - Many of them lived boring lives because that's what they were told to do — the opportunity to pursue ambition simply didn't exist for them
  - He gives them credit for building the country as it is today, but notes: the game has changed
- On pushback from parents and friends:
  - They'll say "slow down, you don't need to do all this now"
  - His response: "Why would I take advice from a generation that lived a life I don't want to live?"
- The payoff: people who choose the striving life produce real results — a serious life that adds value to society and is rewarded accordingly

Lie 10: Academic Performance Predicts Success 16:28

- Greg's personal frustration: at 31 years old, he still feels bitterness toward the academic system because it hasn't changed in 300+ years
- His claim: academic performance has no direct relationship to your ability to be an entrepreneur or a creative employee
- Personal data:
  - He graduated university with approximately a 2.5 GPA
  - He was placed on academic probation twice
  - His wife was also on academic probation
  - Together they built a multi-billion dollar organization — Bloom
- Evidence from Bloom's own team:
  - Reviewed records of Bloom's most successful people — many became millionaires before age 35 through their Bloom experience
  - None of them attended a university that would have qualified them to become early millionaires by traditional metrics
- His characterization of the academic system:
  - It is essentially a childcare facility so that the previous generation could go to their 9-to-5 jobs
  - Students learn for at most one hour per day in real terms
  - The system is 300 years old and unchanged
- Connecting back to Lie 3: if you didn't perform well academically, do not let that disqualify you from playing in the modern arena

Closing Message 17:57

- Greg signs off from his view of the Statue of Liberty, Brooklyn Bridge, and Ellis Island
- Final message:
  - You have permission to pursue your big goal in 2026
  - You can become an unrecognizable version of yourself in just 6 months
  - You can change the trajectory of your entire life with one decision made today
- His single defining belief:

"The only difference between a winner and a loser is the choice they made. It's just a choice."

- Call to action: go achieve your goals
