Why I Put String Cheese in My Back Pocket

Channel: Brandon Carter · Published: Nov 02, 2026 · Watch: https://www.youtube.com/shorts/1LKaW9XF8DI Source: full transcript

📋 Executive Summary

Brandon Carter shares his unconventional habit of warming string cheese in his back pocket for ~10 minutes to improve texture and taste, using it as a convenient, filling snack between protein shakes and full meals.

📑 Contents

- 🧀 The Back-Pocket String Cheese Method
- 🔥 Other Warming Options
- 💪 Why String Cheese Over a Protein Shake

🧀 The Back-Pocket String Cheese Method 0:00

- Brandon acknowledges the habit is "a little weird" and "unconventional"
- Process:
  - Take string cheese out of the refrigerator
  - Place it in his back pocket
  - Let body heat (specifically "butt heat") warm it for about 10 minutes
  - The cheese melts slightly, changing its texture and taste
- He describes the result as having "a little bit more texture" and tasting noticeably different when warmed

🔥 Other Warming Options 0:22

- The back pocket isn't strictly necessary — he notes you can simply leave the cheese out at room temperature
- He has also used the microwave: just 5–6 seconds is enough to improve it
  - "It makes it a little better. Just a little better."

💪 Why String Cheese Over a Protein Shake 0:22

- Brandon drinks a lot of protein shakes regularly
- Sometimes he wants something more satisfying without committing to a full meal
- String cheese fills that middle ground — more filling than a shake, less involved than cooking
- Typical serving: a handful of cheese sticks warmed in his pocket
- After eating them, he gets straight back to work — it's designed to be a quick, no-fuss snack