I Only Know 3 Things For Sure

Channel: Brandon Carter · Published: Nov 02, 2026 · Watch: https://www.youtube.com/shorts/b67atc7HWQM Source: full transcript

📋 Executive Summary

Brandon Carter shares three personal certainties, then dives into the most actionable one: niching down. In saturated markets like fitness, standing out requires a specific target audience, a clear problem to solve, and a unique mechanism.

📑 Contents

- 🔢 The Three Things He Knows For Sure
- 🎯 Why Going Broad Is the Biggest Mistake
- 🔍 How to Niche Down: The Three-Part Framework

🔢 The Three Things He Knows For Sure 0:00

- Carter opens with a disclaimer: "I don't know everything" — but he has three non-negotiables
  - "You got to put money over" (implied: everything)
  - "Snitches get stitches"
  - "The riches are in the niches"
- He calls these the only certainties; "everything else is kind of debatable"

🎯 Why Going Broad Is the Biggest Mistake 0:00

- A common instinct is to cast a wide net: "I can get more people, I want to talk to more people"
  - Carter calls this "the biggest mistake"
- Uses the fitness industry as a primary example
  - Describes it as "super saturated" — countless trainers and online creators competing
  - The paradox: trying to reach everyone makes you invisible to everyone

> "The riches are in the niches" — the core principle the entire framework is built around.

🔍 How to Niche Down: The Three-Part Framework 0:22

- Niching down is the solution to standing out in a crowded market
- Carter calls "niche" his "favorite N-word"

- The framework has three components:
  - Step 1 — Find your target market (the "Who")
    - Identify exactly who you want to market to
    - Specificity is the goal — not a broad demographic, but a defined person
  - Step 2 — Define the specific problem you help them solve
    - Narrow your focus to one clear pain point or goal for that audience
  - Step 3 — Establish a Unique Mechanism
    - This is where real differentiation happens
    - The unique mechanism = how you help them solve that problem in a way others don't
    - Described as a marketing concept that sets you apart from competitors offering similar outcomes
- Note: the transcript cuts off as Carter begins elaborating on the unique mechanism step