Book 1: Ready Fire Aim by Michael Masterson 0:00

- Lays out what you need to do at every level of income, from zero to $100 million per year
- Core insight: people often focus on the wrong things — not because the things are bad, but because they're wrong for their current stage of business
- Key advice for beginners: focus on sales first
 - "Until you're making sales, you got a hobby, not a business"
 - Sales is the primary priority before anything else when starting out

Book 2: Expert Secrets by Russell Brunson 0:23

- Described as "probably required reading" for new entrepreneurs
- Stands out among marketing books for being highly actionable rather than just high-level ideas
 - Most marketing books offer broad concepts; this one tells you exactly what to do
- Brandon found it personally very helpful and recommends it broadly

Book 3: Influence by Robert Cialdini 0:47

- Positioned as the go-to book for higher-level marketing principles
- Key distinction: principles vs. tactics
 - Tactics change constantly; principles are enduring

- Many people learn tactics without understanding the underlying principles
- When a tactic stops working, those without foundational knowledge can't adapt
- This book provides that foundational understanding of why persuasion works

Book 4: Pitch Anything 1:09

- Brandon calls it the best sales book he's encountered
- He has read or listened to it over 100 times
- Requires every salesperson he has ever managed to read and study it
- Strong endorsement: "If you do sales in any capacity and you have not read this book, then you, my friend, are hustling backwards"
- Advice: don't just read it — study it and apply it

Book 5: Never Split the Difference by Chris Voss 1:32

- Author background: Chris Voss was an FBI hostage negotiator who dealt with terrorists and bank robbers
 - Brandon's logic: if Voss could negotiate in life-or-death situations, he can teach everyday negotiation (e.g., negotiating a raise)
- Brandon owned a physical copy but lost it when he moved to Miami — already had it on Kindle so it wasn't a problem
- Described as potentially the best negotiation book ever written: "There has never been and may never be a better book on negotiation"

Bonus: Live Training Offer 1:55

- Brandon promotes a free live training for people interested in making money as an online fitness trainer
- Topics covered in the training:
 - How to become an online trainer
 - How to use AI to grow an online fitness business within the same week
- Call to action: comment the word "online" on the video to receive a direct link to the training
