Executive Summary

Brandon Carter outlines four S-tier habits — cutting brain rot, mastering one skill daily, documenting progress publicly, and launching something real — arguing six months is enough to separate you from who you used to be.

Contents

- 🗑️ Habit 1: Delete All Brain Rot
- 🎯 Habit 2: Choose One Valuable Skill and Study It Daily
- 📱 Habit 3: Document Your Learning Through Short-Form Content
- 🛠️ Habit 4: Build Something of Your Own
- ⌚ The 6-Month Reframe

Habit 1: Delete All Brain Rot 0:00

- Stop binging passive content made by people pursuing their dreams while you ignore yours
 - The implicit cost: every hour spent consuming others' progress is an hour not spent on your own

Habit 2: Choose One Valuable Skill and Study It Daily 0:05

- Pick one skill — examples given:
 - Sales
 - Marketing
 - Content creation
 - Coaching
 - Coding
 - Or whatever aligns with your specific goals
- Study it every single day until people cannot ignore how good you've become
 - Consistency and depth over scattered learning

Habit 3: Document Your Learning Through Short-Form Content 0:18

- Do NOT wait until you feel like an expert before sharing
- Teach what you know now and show your progress in real time
- Let the audience grow alongside you
 - This builds an audience organically while reinforcing your own learning

Habit 4: Build Something of Your Own 0:28

- Create something tangible — examples given:
 - An offer
 - A coaching program
 - A product
 - An app
 - A business
- Failure is explicitly encouraged — "it might fail, and that's good"
 - You learn more about business from launching and failing than from watching motivational videos

The 6-Month Reframe 0:46

- Six months is not enough time to master anything
- But it is enough to separate you from the old version of yourself who never started

"If you lock in, pick a skill, build an audience, launch the thing." — the entire prescription in one sentence

- The goal isn't perfection or mastery; it's movement and identity change
