

Trust, it works.

Channel: Tim Luong · Published: Aug 25, 2026 · Watch: <https://www.youtube.com/shorts/08NqM4SKFX0> Source: full transcript

Executive Summary

Tim Luong attributes his transformation from a chronic procrastinator to a multi-millionaire in his 20s to one simple principle: always do the thing you're avoiding alongside another person to force accountability.

Contents

-  The One Trick Behind His Success
-  How It Started: Studying With a Friend
-  Applying It to Fitness
-  Applying It to Business
-  The Core Takeaway

The One Trick Behind His Success 0:00

- Tim frames himself as "the laziest" person in high school who went on to become a multi-millionaire in his 20s
 - He attributes the entire transformation to figuring out one thing: doing tasks with another person

How It Started: Studying With a Friend 0:00

- His procrastination problem was severe — he'd book a 5-hour library study block and spend the whole time scrolling social media and Facebook instead
- The turning point: whenever he studied with a friend from the same class, he actually studied the entire time
 - The presence of another person was enough to eliminate the distraction entirely

Applying It to Fitness 0:22

- Wanted to get in the best shape of his life during college
- Solution: found a workout partner and committed to training together
 - Hit the gym 5 days a week for 4 years straight
 - Did not miss a single week over that entire period

Applying It to Business 0:22

- After college, he started a business and found the same principle applied

- Had a business partner in the early days to maintain accountability
- Current practice: whenever he needs to get work done that he's been putting off, he hops on a Zoom call and works alongside another person
 - Explicitly acknowledges he knows he won't get it done on his own without that structure

✓ The Core Takeaway 0:46

"By incorporating this tiny thing of just doing the thing you want to get done that you keep procrastinating with somebody else, it will make you accountable." - The method is simple and universal: identify the task you keep procrastinating on, then do it alongside another person - Works across studying, fitness, and business — any area where self-discipline alone falls short - The "body double" effect (being in the presence of another person) is the mechanism — not necessarily their direct input or advice