Finding Your Unfair Advantage 0:00

- Look back at things you've been able to accomplish that felt natural and easy
 - Time periods to examine: junior high, high school, college, and beyond
 - The key signal: things you pursued and went out of your way to do naturally at a younger age
- Leadership is given as the primary example
 - Were you a captain of a sports team?
 - Were you a class president?
 - Were you a club president or on an exec board?
 - These roles tend to appear early and reflect an innate tendency, not forced effort
- The premise: early natural pursuits reflect what will show up and matter later in life

The Two Halves of the Battle 0:48

- The speaker frames the entire process as two equal halves:
 - 50% — Looking for the patterns in your past accomplishments and natural pursuits
 - 50% — Acting on those patterns and testing things out to see what sticks
- The implication: recognition alone is not enough; you must also experiment and execute on what you find
