📋 Executive Summary

Brandon Carter shows how he uses single Claude prompts to produce 6 different video editing styles — eliminating manual editing decisions by simply typing what he wants.

📑 Contents

- 🎬 The Core Concept
- 🖼️ Style 1: Graphics on Top, Me on Bottom
- ✂️ Style 2: 29 Cuts in 6 Seconds
- 📸 Style 3: Photos Changing Above My Head
- ⚖️ Style 4: You Want / You Must
- 🔥 Style 5: Comment Card on Fire
- 🗓️ Style 6: My Whole Day in Four Panels

🎬 The Core Concept

- Brandon no longer manually chooses an editing style — he types it instead
  - Each of the 6 styles shown is produced by a single command to Claude
  - The implication is that the entire edit flows from one natural-language prompt
- The video serves as a demonstration reel of AI-driven editing variety

🖼️ Style 1: Graphics on Top, Me on Bottom

- Layout splits the frame: graphic/visual content occupies the top half, Brandon appears on the bottom
  - Likely a split-screen or overlay format common in explainer or reaction content

✂️ Style 2: 29 Cuts in 6 Seconds

- Extremely rapid-fire editing — 29 distinct cuts packed into 6 seconds
  - Roughly one cut every ~0.2 seconds
  - Suggests a high-energy, attention-grabbing style suited for hooks or highlights

📸 Style 3: Photos Changing Above My Head

- Images cycle or swap dynamically above Brandon's head while he speaks
  - Visually illustrates talking points in real time
  - Similar to a floating-image or kinetic photo overlay format

⚖️ Style 4: You Want / You Must

- A contrast or tension format structured around two opposing statements: "You want" vs. "You must"
  - Likely a text-on-screen or split narrative style emphasizing a motivational or instructional message

🔥 Style 5: Comment Card on Fire

- Features a comment card visual effect with a fire treatment applied
  - Suggests a style that highlights audience comments or reactions with dramatic visual flair

🗓️ Style 6: My Whole Day in Four Panels

- A four-panel layout compressing an entire day into a single frame or sequence
  - Grid or comic-strip style format — each panel represents a different moment or segment of the day
