📋 Executive Summary

With only 60 days left in 2026, most people have already quit their goals. Brandon Carter presents a three-tool system — Google Calendar, Notion, and an AI personal agent — to plan, track, and execute goals and enter 2027 with real momentum.

🎯 The Opportunity: Why 60 Days Is Enough 0:00

- The year has roughly 60 days remaining and most people have already abandoned their 2026 goals
  - Everyone says "next year is my year" — but they say it every year
- 60 days is genuinely enough time to make significant progress
  - The goal is not just to finish 2026 strong but to build habits and momentum going into 2027
  - You can enter the new year already ahead, with the right systems already in place
- The end of the year is what Brandon calls the "Mediocre Marathon"
  - Everyone starts slacking: Christmas parties, New Year's parties, Thanksgiving hangouts
  - Most people check out — which is exactly why staying consistent now is a competitive advantage
- This video is specifically for people who are serious about achieving something big and refuse to quit

👤 Who Brandon Carter Is 1:08

- Grew up poor on the South Side of Chicago
- His father died by suicide when Brandon was in his early 20s; he had to take over responsibility for his entire family
- Built a multi-million dollar business starting from zero
- Has helped 15,000+ people build their own successful businesses, primarily in the online fitness space
- Describes this video as potentially the best he has ever made on achieving goals

🛠️ The Three Tools You Need 1:32

- Tool 1: Google Calendar
  - Used to plan every single hour of every single day
  - Brandon has used it this way for over a decade
  - His calendar is his #1 productivity tool — every hour of every day is accounted for
- Tool 2: Notion
  - Used to document tasks to complete over the next 60 days
  - Used to write out the action plan, each step, and set deadlines for each step
  - Most people have goals but never write them down, never make a plan, never set deadlines — Notion fixes all of this
  - Brandon has a free template called the Victory Vision Planner (link in description)
    - Download it, connect it to your AI agent, and have the agent delete the dummy data before you begin
- Tool 3: An AI Personal Agent
  - You need a frontier-level model — not a weak free version
  - Recommended options (all four are strong; pick one):

Agent	Model	Notes
ChatGPT Dots	Astra (OpenAI flagship)	Brandon's top pick; can control Codex
Claude Duet	Opus 5.5 (Anthropic)	Excellent model; cannot yet control Claude Code
Grok Bot	Sometimes Opus 5.5	Inconsistent — you don't know when it's running Opus
Meta Muse	Wonder (frontier model)	Only use if you have a paid subscription; free version is noticeably weaker

- Brandon's personal recommendation is ChatGPT Dots because he can use it to control Codex
  - If Grok Bot always ran on Opus 5.5, he'd use that — but it doesn't guarantee it
  - Whichever agent you pick: connect it to both Google Calendar and Notion
- You do NOT need complex prompts with these agents — they are now advanced enough to understand plain conversational language

📅 Step 1: Plan Every Hour of Every Day in Google Calendar 4:59

- Open your AI agent in voice mode and say: "Hey, help me plan my calendar. I have a lot of recurring tasks. I want you to add them to my Google Calendar."
- Tell the agent all your recurring commitments:
  - Sleep and wake times
  - Work hours (commute in, commute out)
  - Gym schedule if you already have one
  - Date nights or family time
  - Any other fixed commitments
- The agent will add these to your calendar in real time as you speak
- Then ask: "Do you think I'm missing anything?" — the agent will prompt you about things like family time that you say matters but haven't scheduled

> "The person who plans every hour of every day cannot be beaten by someone operating randomly."

- Analogy: Your favorite freestyle rapper (Harry Mack, Juice WRLD, Eminem) is impressive off the cuff — but their written, rehearsed work is always better than their freestyle. You are the same.
- Everything important must be in the calendar — family, girlfriend, nephews, health, all of it
  - Brandon schedules time with his son, his nieces/nephews in Miami (whose father died in a car accident), and his girlfriend
  - He took his son on a multi-week Disney cruise this summer while running a multi-seven-figure business
- You can swap tasks around — flexibility is fine — but you must have a strategy for each day, week, and month
- The goal of this step: get ALL recurring commitments onto the calendar so you can see your available time

🎯 Step 2: Define Your 60-Day Goals in the Victory Vision Planner 7:38

- Brandon normally prefers 90-day planning cycles but with only 60 days left, 60-day planning is appropriate
- Do NOT make 5-year plans — the world changes too fast (5 years ago ChatGPT didn't exist)
- Tell your agent: "Pull up the Victory Vision Planner where I deleted the dummy data. Help me plan my goals for the next 60 days."
- How the Victory Vision Planner works:
  - Each column = one goal
  - Each card within a column = one step toward that goal
  - Each card must include detailed description of the step AND a deadline
- Talk through your goals with the agent in conversation — it will help you structure each one step by step
- Keep it to a maximum of 3 goals — most people should have only 1
  - Suggested structure:

    - 1 income/business goal
    - 1 fitness goal
    - 1 optional relationship/family goal
  - Do NOT create 18 goals — you will accomplish nothing
- Planning this properly will take 2–3 hours — that is normal and expected

🔁 Step 3: Understand One-Time vs. Recurring Tasks 9:29

- Every goal is made up of two types of tasks:

Task Type	Definition	Fitness Example	Business Example
Recurring	Done daily, weekly, or on a rhythm	Track calories, work out 3–4x/week, drink 1 gallon of water/day	Post content daily, contact 20 leads per day
One-Time	Done once and complete	Get gym membership, hire a coach, create a workout plan	Register LLC, get an EIN number

- Recurring tasks drive the most progress — but consistency with them is where most people fail
- One-time tasks give you more flexibility if you miss them; recurring tasks do not

✅ Step 4: Schedule Every Task Into Your Calendar 13:40

- By now your calendar already shows your recurring personal commitments (sleep, work, family, gym)
- You can see your open/available time slots
- Tell your agent: "Take all my tasks — both one-time and recurring — and if they're not in the calendar, estimate how long each will take and block time in my calendar to complete them. Make sure every task has a deadline in the Notion card. Confirm you understood me correctly before you start."
  - Brandon recommends asking the agent to explain back what it understood before executing, especially if you're using a less intelligent model like free Muse
- The agent will find open time slots and fill them with your goal-related tasks
- Result: your goals are now fully planned — every step has a time, a place, and a deadline

📊 Step 5: Track Consistency with the Success Tracker 10:36

- The Victory Vision Planner has a section called the "Success Tracker" specifically for recurring tasks
- It tracks your recurring tasks every day automatically
- You don't even need to open it manually — your agent is connected and updates it for you
  - Example: Brandon tells his agent his macros at end of day; agent updates the tracker
  - Apple Health is connected → agent auto-updates calories burned, sleep hours, etc.
  - Stripe/bank account + email connected → revenue and financials update daily

- Goal: automate tracking as much as possible; the few things that must be entered manually take only seconds because most data is pre-filled
- Tell your agent: "Edit the Success Tracker section of the Victory Vision Planner with our agreed recurring tasks and help me track them daily. Look at my connected accounts and tell me what you can track automatically."
- On consistency — Brandon's blunt take:
  - People say "I'm pretty consistent" but can't say exactly how consistent they are
  - You feed your kids every day — not "most days" — or they get taken away
  - You walk your dog every day or your house fills with mess

> "Your life is full of mess because you only sometimes follow your routine. No mediocre mantras."

- Tracking is what reveals the truth about how consistent you actually are 🤖 Step 6: Use Your AI Agent for Daily Accountability 15:09

- Every night, check in with your agent and say: "Did I complete all my tasks today? What was done and what wasn't? Update my Victory Vision Planner accordingly."
- For one-time tasks you didn't complete:
  - Do NOT abandon them — reschedule them
  - Move the calendar block and update the Notion deadline
  - Life happens (emergencies, unexpected business issues) — that's normal
- For recurring tasks you missed:
  - You CANNOT make them up the next day — that day is simply lost
  - Missing your macros today means you missed them today — you still have to hit them tomorrow too
  - Missing a workout: you might be able to shift it within the same week (once or twice), but you can't carry it forward indefinitely
  - If you must sacrifice something, sacrifice a one-time task — never a recurring one
- During the day, it's fine to shift tasks around as situations arise (employees get sick, emergencies happen) — just don't delete tasks from your list entirely
- First week expectation: you will be bad at this — things will fall apart. That is normal.
  - By week 2 or 3 you'll find your rhythm
  - You'll get better at estimating how long tasks take; so will your agent

⚡ Step 7: Let Agents Do the Work For You 18:13

- Each night when you check in, ask your agent: "What tasks on my to-do list for tomorrow can you actually do for me?"
- These agents are now far more powerful than 6 months ago — they can take action, not just answer questions

- Examples of what agents can do for you:
  - Meta Muse (paid tier): Can go into Instagram, find leads who ghosted you, and follow up on your behalf
  - Any agent: Can draft presentations, write content, send messages
  - Brandon has Claude or ChatGPT edit his videos — he submits to both and posts whichever does the best job
  - Agents also post the content — not Brandon himself
- Brandon's multi-agent system:
  - ChatGPT Dots = primary agent / team leader — oversees the Victory Vision Planner
  - All other agents (Duet, Muse, Grok) also have access to the Victory Vision Planner
  - Each agent has different strengths — he routes tasks accordingly
    - Muse: Instagram outreach
    - Duet or Grok: drafting, planning
  - Agents proactively look at his calendar and offer to handle things without being asked
- Key mindset shift: *"I don't just ask AI questions. It does my work for me."

🏁 Final Advice & Free Resources 17:48

- Brandon has followed a calendar-based lifestyle for over a decade — it is his single #1 productivity tool
- "If you can take one thing from me, it's this: live by your calendar. Plan every hour of every day."
  - You'll accomplish more AND spend more time with family and friends — not less
- If you stay consistent with this system, it becomes very hard to fail
- Free guide available: DM Brandon on Instagram (King Kin Doh) and send the number 3 to get the full guide with all steps and prompts
- Victory Vision Planner Notion template: linked in the video description — download it and have your agent delete the dummy data before starting
- Brandon noted that Claude or ChatGPT will select which related videos appear at the end of this video — the agents decide, not him
