Marriage & Kids Are A Luxury

Channel: Onem · Published: Oct 28, 2026 · Watch: https://www.youtube.com/shorts/U-FdKko0Ufg Source: full transcript

📋 Executive Summary

Chris (age 34) contends that marriage and children are a luxury requiring financial readiness — not a default life milestone — and that pursuing them while broke is irresponsible and unsustainable.

📑 Contents

- 🏆 Marriage & Kids as a Luxury, Not a Right
- 💸 The Financial Bar for Family Life
- 🐾 Nature & History: Earning the Right to Mate
- 📊 The Financial Benchmarks Chris Lays Out

🏆 Marriage & Kids as a Luxury, Not a Right 0:00

- Chris pushes back on unsolicited life advice, asserting at 34 he doesn't feel obligated to follow conventional paths
- Core claim: having children is a luxury, not a necessity or a god-given right
  - Most people treat marriage and kids as a "standard practice of life" — a default path everyone will take
  - Chris says that assumption is wrong; it must be earned, not expected
- The "what if I turn 50 and haven't done it?" concern is dismissed
  - His response: "That's called the race of life"
  - The implication is that failing to reach the finish line is a real and acceptable outcome if you didn't do the work

💸 The Financial Bar for Family Life 0:21

- If both partners must work 50/50 and split bills, Chris frames that as "two men living in the house together" — a signal you're not ready
  - The conclusion to draw in that situation: "I'm not rich enough for this"
- He references a prior video with the principle: "If you're broke, don't date"
- His ideal threshold: enough money that your partner can effectively "retire"
  - She can raise children, manage the home, travel freely, and blend into your lifestyle without needing to work
  - Anything short of that: "It's too early"

- States he personally has no problem remaining childless and without a partner for life if he never achieved financial success
  - "If I was broke the rest of my life, I'd be like, I didn't figure it out"

🐾 Nature & History: Earning the Right to Mate 1:07

- Bird analogy: a bird builds the best nest it can, then earns the right to mate — humans should operate the same way
- Historical framing: in every prior era, wars and battles were fought; survivors earned "the spoils" — women and family were prizes for the strong
  - "The strong people that survived got the prize"
- Modern problem: for the first time in history, an unemployed man on benefits can father seven children
  - Chris calls this "dangerous" and unprecedented
  - His view: people no longer feel they must put in the work to earn family life
- Animal kingdom parallel: in mating season, the male who loses the fight simply doesn't mate — no participation trophies

📊 The Financial Benchmarks Chris Lays Out 1:51

- Scenario 1 — Strong position:
  - Earning £100k+ per year
  - Low bills
  - Saving £4,000–£5,000 per month
  - Verdict: "You're in a great position. Make it happen."
- Scenario 2 — Also viable if costs are controlled:
  - Earning £50k per year
  - Bills are "dirt cheap, super low"
  - Example: living in Bali with a paid-off house
  - Verdict: "Can we do it? Yeah, we can do it. It's sustainable."
- Key nuance: you don't have to be a millionaire — the ratio of income to expenses matters more than raw income
- The word he uses to describe these situations: sustainable — the bar is whether family life is genuinely maintainable long-term