What you need to buy first

Channel: Tim Luong · Published: Oct 28, 2026 · Watch: https://www.youtube.com/shorts/IadjSee_qdg Source: full transcript

📋 Executive Summary

Once you start earning money, prioritize spending on convenience services that reclaim your time over luxury items — time freedom is the highest-ROI purchase you can make early on.

📑 Contents

- 💡 The Counterintuitive Purchase Philosophy
- 🕐 Convenience Spending Examples
- 📈 The Core Principle: Buy Back Your Time

💡 The Counterintuitive Purchase Philosophy 0:00

- Tim's favorite purchases in life have NOT been luxury cars, watches, or similar status items
  - He describes this as "ironic" — the things most people aspire to buy aren't what deliver the most satisfaction
- The purchases that have resonated most are ones that buy convenience — paying someone else to handle tasks he dislikes

🕐 Convenience Spending Examples 0:00

- Specific services he outsources:
  - Weekly laundry service — never has to think about it
  - Regular home cleaning — keeping his place maintained without his own effort
  - Meal prep and macro tracking — someone else handles food planning so he doesn't have to think about nutrition
  - Personal trainer — programs workouts for him so he doesn't have to figure out training himself
- The common thread: tasks he doesn't enjoy or doesn't want to spend mental energy on are delegated entirely

📈 The Core Principle: Buy Back Your Time 0:21

- His belief: once you begin earning money, the best investment is in purchases that return time to you
  - More time can be redirected toward making more money OR toward other life priorities — whatever matters to you

- Actionable priority order:
  - Optimize for time-buying convenience purchases first
  - Only then consider luxury items
- Luxury goods come second, not first — convenience and time freedom are the higher-leverage early spend

> "The best investment in purchases are actually things that are able to get your time back so that you have more time to do what you want, whether it's making more money or doing other things with your life."