Executive Summary

Unlike school, business has no single correct answer — A, B, C, and D can all be valid. The only winning move is to choose one playbook, act on it fast, and learn from the feedback.

School vs. Business Mindset 0:00

- Society spends the first ~20 years of life training people to think in multiple choice — one correct answer out of A, B, C, or D
  - This framework is deeply ingrained and feels like the default way to approach decisions
- Business breaks that framework entirely
  - In business, A, B, C, and D can all be valid paths — there is no pre-determined correct option
  - The real skill is choosing one playbook and deploying it, rather than searching for the "right" answer before moving

The Only Real Answer: Action 0:23

- The faster you make decisions, the faster you collect feedback on what is and isn't working
  - Speed of decision-making directly accelerates the learning loop
  - Waiting for certainty delays the feedback that would actually create certainty

"You know what the answer is, and the answer is action."

- The core takeaway: stop looking for the perfect choice and start moving — action itself is the answer
