

Your job as the CEO

Channel: Tim Luong · Published: Aug 08, 2026 · Watch: https://www.youtube.com/shorts/swk7yBK_-gQ Source: full transcript

Executive Summary

A CEO's primary responsibility is giving people crystal-clear direction and goals. Vague vision leads to misaligned execution; specific 90-day departmental rocks dramatically raise a company's success rate.

Contents

-  The CEO's Core Job: Alignment on Vision
-  Clear Rocks vs. Winging It

The CEO's Core Job: Alignment on Vision 0:00

- The founder/CEO's primary role is to get people aligned on the vision
 - People need to know exactly what to do — that clarity is the reason the CEO exists
 - Without clear direction, team members default to their own interpretation of what the goal should be
 - This creates misaligned execution across the organization
- A vague goal is the root cause of misaligned effort
 - Each person filling in the blanks independently pulls the company in different directions

Clear Rocks vs. Winging It 0:22

- The solution: define very clear goals and "rocks" for every single department
 - "Rocks" = the highest-leverage priorities for the company over the next 90 days
 - Every department should know its specific rock so there is no ambiguity
- Companies with this structure set themselves up for a much higher success rate
 - Contrasted directly with companies that are "just kind of winging it"

The CEO's job isn't just to have a vision — it's to make that vision so specific and concrete that no one on the team has to guess what to do next.