

SpaceX $2 trillion IPO is crazy

Channel: Arie Scherson · Published: Jun 15, 2026 · Watch: <https://www.youtube.com/shorts/EP2ymUTIO0Q> Source: full transcript

Executive Summary

SpaceX goes public at a record-breaking $2 trillion valuation, making Elon Musk the world's first trillionaire. The creator celebrates but laments that everyday investors missed out on most of the company's value growth.

Contents

-  SpaceX IPO Announcement & Key Numbers
-  The Creator's Main Criticism
-  Congrats — and Disbelief

SpaceX IPO Announcement & Key Numbers 0:00

- SpaceX officially went public, making it available for anyone to invest in
- Trading opened at $150 per share
- Total valuation at IPO: more than $2 trillion
- This makes it the largest IPO of all time
- Elon Musk rang the NASDAQ opening bell from SpaceX's headquarters in Starbase, Texas
- The IPO also made Musk the world's first trillionaire

The Creator's Main Criticism 0:23

- The creator's core complaint: the public did not get access to most of SpaceX's value creation
 - By the time of the IPO, the company was already valued at $2 trillion — most of the growth had already happened in private markets
 - Retail investors are only now getting in at the top of that early growth curve
- He acknowledges there is still future upside to look forward to, but frames it as a missed opportunity
- His hypothetical: it "would have been cool" if SpaceX had gone public much earlier — citing ~$300 billion as an example valuation where public investors could have benefited from the ride up

"The public did not get access to most of that value creation."

Congrats — and Disbelief 0:47

- Despite the criticism, the creator offers genuine congratulations to Elon Musk and the entire SpaceX team
- Reflects on how unlikely this outcome once seemed
 - He says that if someone had predicted this outcome earlier, he would have thought they were delusional — "man, you must be smoking some really good crack"
 - He genuinely believed the company might fail at some earlier point
- The tone is a mix of awe and bittersweet acknowledgment of what retail investors missed