

Don't take direction from someone who hasn't been there.

Channel: Greg Lav · Published: Oct 07, 2026 · Watch: <https://www.youtube.com/shorts/mBAAsu2pvFjE> Source: full transcript

Executive Summary

Only take advice from people actively practicing what they preach right now. Outdated experience, poor personal results, and get-rich-quick courses are signs an advisor isn't credible.

Contents

-  Don't Take Advice from the Unqualified
-  The Fitness Influencer Problem
-  The Same Rule Applies Everywhere
-  The Get-Rich-Quick Warning

Don't Take Advice from the Unqualified 0:00

- Core principle: never take advice from someone who hasn't done the thing themselves
 - Extended rule: don't take advice from someone who isn't actively doing it right now
 - Even past success has an expiration date — if someone did something ten years ago, much of their advice may be outdated
 - The landscape changes; what worked then may be completely irrelevant today

The Fitness Influencer Problem 0:22

- Used as a concrete example: some of the most famous fitness influencers today have physiques that nobody actually wants
 - Yet people follow them, download their apps, do their workouts, and follow their advice
 - The contradiction: why listen to someone who doesn't have the body you're trying to achieve?
- This illustrates how popularity and credibility are not the same thing

The Same Rule Applies Everywhere 0:22

- The principle extends beyond fitness
 - Business: don't take business advice from someone whose business isn't working
 - Marriage: don't take relationship advice from someone who is in a bad marriage

- Key takeaway: follow and listen only to people who are actively living the result you want

The Get-Rich-Quick Warning 0:43

- A specific red flag: if someone is selling you a course on getting rich quickly, they are simply getting rich off of you
 - Their wealth comes from selling the course, not from the method they're teaching

The clearest sign someone isn't a credible source: they profit from your belief in them, not from practicing what they teach.