

@ZssBecker

Post · 2026-10-08 · View on X

Executive Summary

ZssBecker argued that many people mistake normal human emotions for mental illness due to avoiding quiet self-reflection, and separately engaged in conversation about a software tool's value and ROI with another user.

Oct 08, 2026 · 7:40 PM

You don't have ADHD, or depression, or clinical anxiety.

You just haven't spent a hour alone with yourself without a screen in years.

Quiet moments. Being sad. Stress. They are parts of life. Ignoring them, drugging over them. That'll make it worse. Stop. Look at them.

1 post · fetched 2026-10-08